

PSH, state form coalition

college students have regularly engaged in binge drinking, or consuming five or more drinks in one sitting.

The PSH chapter is one of 22 throughout the state. It brings together educational leaders, including the superintendents of Middletown and Steelton-Highspire school districts; law enforcement agencies; Lower Swatara Twp. and Middletown Borough; and the PSH faculty, staff and students.

"This is truly an integrated effort never attempted before," said Donald Holtzman, PSH director of student affairs.

"We feel this is going to be beneficial for every university; and it gives us a birds-eye view of what's actually occurring on our campus," said state police Lieutenant Huston Williams, who enforces the state's liquor control laws.

Williams believes bad habits aren't solely a college problem. Often they begin in junior high school and then worsen.

Bruhn believes colleges can help change that trend. He said, "If the example needs to be set, we may need to prohibit alcohol at Capital Campus."

XGI's out in search of blood blood to Chi Gamma Iota's blood drive. This semester, the drive will be from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Wed., Oct. 28, in the Gallery Lounge.

The XGI's sponsor the drive in conjunction with the Central Penn Blood Bank. All blood is donated under the XGI name, and whenever a member of the Penn State Harrisburg community is in need of blood, Central Penn will ask for a certain number of pints to be released from the bank.

In the last few years, the XGI blood bank has been able to help a few members of Penn State as well as family members of Penn State faculty, staff and students.

Radio readies return to airwaves

broadcasting. That is why I transferred here."

Kopitke, a junior from the University of South Florida, had similar feelings. "My old school focused on business so I transferred here because of the communications program," he said. "I was hoping to get involved with the radio station right away."

The PSH communications program has drawn students, but until the complications are solved, the "Reactor" will stay silent.
