Helping College Students Choose A Career

North American Precis Syndicate

What am I going to do with the rest of my life? Sound familiar?

At universities throughout the country, these words cross the lips of thousands of college seniors every day. Thankfully, career counseling has come a long way in the last 20 years.

Choosing a career need not be so daunting, say career counselors, if students avail themselves of the resources that are actually much closer to home than they think.

Career Searching

Students looking for "the perfect job" need to remember one thing, warn the experts.

Jobs have to fit you, regardless of what is "hot" or available. The most important aspect of career exploration is self-assessment. Capitalize on your talents and change your mind a million times as you explore the possibilities.

Networking

In college, there are many effective ways to network—they involve talking to people you already know.

You don't need to begin your networking efforts by cold calling strangers and attending formal luncheons; start with people who are already an important part of your life, such as family members, professors and friends.

Alter the Question

Instead of asking, "What do I want to do?" ask yourself, "What do I want to do for now (or the next three, six or 12 months). Giving yourself permission to make temporary decisions instead of "the big one" can help get the gears moving.

One college graduate, who decided to make a career decision that was right "for the moment," is this year's Burger King College Football Scholar Athlete of the Year recipient, Hofstra University quarterback Giovanni Carmazzi. As an exceptional athlete and scholar, Carmazzi is a good example of capitalizing on one's talent to forge a career path.

Carmazzi maintained a 3.95 GPA as a business management major, while starting as quarterback for his team and volunteering for a variety of community organizations.

This prestigious honor enabled Carmazzi to earn $135,000 for Hofstra University's general scholarship fund, putting this amazing scholar athlete in the spotlight all over the nation—Carmazzi is currently eligible as an NFL draft pick.

Developed to foster the pursuit of athletic and academic excellence while encouraging social awareness and community service, the Burger King College Football Scholarship Program is the single, largest corporate commitment of its kind to the sport of college football.

The program has already endowed more than 5.3 million dollars in college scholarship funds to more than 250 colleges and universities nationwide in the last five years.

While playing professional football might not be in everyone's future, finding an exciting stimulating career is certainly within reach and the tools of the trade are available to everyone.
