

What is the most important issue in the presidential campaign?

Survey and photos by Debra Glass

Tina Jackson

Elementary Education

"The important issue is education, not voting for Bush—his emphasis is for teachers to be held accountable for students' success—regardless of school conditions or other issues."

Kenn Grimm

American Studies

"I am voting for George Bush because his father was a president before him and he could give his son 'good' advice, for the welfare of our country. This is my deciding factor, because it is too close."

Linmaya Kenyon

Psychology

"A combination of several issues are of importance to me. While I am affected by standing or personal issues such as abortion and gun control, being 25, I need to know the economy will continue to grow rather than decline."

Jay Kleinfelter

Finance

"Important are crime prevention and education."

Timothy Christy

Psychology

"The failing war on drugs, which is a money issue for the two major parties."

Robert English

Finance

"The two candidates are so closely tied together (with issues), that individuals will tend to stick with their party origins."

Monkey Wrangler Seeks $50K

"Monkeys R Us" Superstore to Open Soon

Editor's Note: With their collective tongues stuck far into their cheeks, Club 831A sponsored an informational lecture on the entrepreneurial concept of marketing small stuffed monkeys as service animals.

In an information session about service monkeys, Matthew Farkas, monkey wrangler extraordinaire, spoke about his vision of "Monkeys R Us." The audience probed Farkas on topics such as overpopulation of monkeys, care for the monkeys, the potential of the monkeys and monkey guarantees.

I guess I should start by explaining what these monkeys will be able to do once they are trained. They will be trained to do such tasks as light housework, home security, chop wood, chauffeur, help the bomb squad, fix your transmission and pimp out other monkeys. The farm is going to start with about two dozen monkeys, and they are going to reproduce to help the farm grow. "Monkey Wranglers" will train the first batch of monkeys and then these trained monkeys will be able to help the wranglers train the new monkeys.

Farkas is currently accepting applications for monkey wranglers. Wranglers will go through six months of training with Farkas before they are allowed to go out on their own.

Monkey Wrangler extraordinaire Matthew Farkas discusses marketing strategies with his business partner.

Once you decide to buy a monkey, you can order it over the phone or online. The cost of one monkey is $1,000, but a couple is only $1,500. Each monkey comes with a money back guarantee. If you are not satisfied with your monkey, you can return it for retraining and if this does not work, "Monkeys R Us" will reimburse your money.

Feel free to contact Mr. Farkas with any further questions concerning his monkeys.

Shave-Off Update

"Lapinski"
Matt Williams

"Coach"
Corey Metz

And then there were two. Corey 'Coach' Metz and Matt 'Lapinski' Williams are the only two left in the Club 831A shave-off contest. The first of the five to crack was Anthony 'Chipper' Chuplis. Chipper broke down on October 19, but for good reason; a job interview. Later that day, Matthew 'Ninja' Farkas fell. He was headed up to main campus that weekend for homecoming and he felt that he would have a better chance with the ladies if he shaved. Two days later, Mike 'Fridge' Hartley caved under pressure from his girlfriend. So now it is a fight to the end between the roomies. Who will triumph? More next issue . . .
