The Instigator Questions... What Kind of Man (or Woman) are You?

There are basically three types of people in this world. This shatters the old notion that there were only ever two types. These three types can be identified as: The Man of War, The Man of Honor, and The Man of Peace.

The Man of War is driven by self-preservation at all costs. The Man of war is almost always driven by greed and/or hate. The Man of War puts his life above all others and cares for no one but himself and those who are useful to him.

The Man of War can be driven by greed. The accumulation of power and wealth becomes the all important and encompassing goal in life. Those that stand in his way must be dealt with. When those close to him outlive their usefulness they become expendable. People who were once his closest friends become trash to be discarded or in extreme circumstances eliminated altogether. Friendship, like all things, is a commodity that is to be bought or sold. Alliances are formed to increase power but mean nothing, should a more lucrative opportunity arise.

The Man of War can be driven by hate. He knows the purest form of hate. The object of his hatred will be destroyed. Those that get in his way will be crushed. The hatred gives him power and fuels his purpose. There can be no bargaining or compromise, only victory.

As you may see, the man of war can potentially be all of us. As humans we are all subject to self-centered ideologies. We are all tempted by greed and hatred and in small ways the overwhelming majority of us succumb sometimes. What separates the Man of War from the other two types is the degree to which he propagates his self-centered, greedy, and hateful tendencies.

The Man of Honor is different than the Man of War. The Man of Honor is susceptible to self-centered practices, greed and hatred. But the Man of Honor has a code of ethics or a code of Honor he lives by.

The Man of Honor does believe in self-preservation, but not at all costs. The Man of Honor can delineate from self-preservation to save or help others. Thus the Man of Honor can perform the act of self-sacrifice. In keeping with his code of Honor it may be prudent to lay down his life in the service of others.

But the Man of Honor can make war. The Man of Honor will fight to protect himself and others. He may feel obligated, depending on his code, to protect those who cannot protect themselves. If attacked or provoked, the Man of Honor will attack and he will fight to the death if need be but he will conduct his actions according to his code. Thus, even war must be conducted "ethically."

The Man of Honor may be seduced by greed but even then the pursuit of wealth and power will be on some sort of ethical scale, accorded by his code. Thus, the Man of Honor may seek profits but not at the expense of others or not at the cost of other people's lives. He will conduct himself responsibly and will be responsive with those who he interacts with. The Man of Honor can hate. But the Man of Honor restrains his hate to a degree. The Man of Honor tempers his hate with his code. Under the extreme duress of hatred, the Man of Honor would seek out his opponent and in a fair contest defeat him or if need be kill him. Assassinations are not the tool of the Man of Honor.

Most of us would in actuality align with the Man of Honor or the Man of War. They are the most common types of people in this world, though I would say I believe the Man of War has always had a considerable gain and advantage over the Man of Honor.

As I'm sure some of you are saying to yourselves, what about the Man of Peace? Well, the Man of Peace is an interesting story. Many of you who are Christians, Muslims, etc. would not truly qualify as a Man of Peace. Most of you would qualify as a Man of Honor. Why do I say this? Well the answer will be made clear in a few moments. The Man of War and The Man of Honor are in a constant state of flux. Between themselves and against each other there is a constant flow of conflicts. To make this clearer, there is a constant battle going on, often a result of greed or hate.

Now the Man of Peace stands apart from all this. The Man of Peace values all life and only expresses love. The Man of Peace is not concerned with self preservation. He would lay down his life for his principles, for his family and friends, for any innocent, and even his "enemies" as well. He will sacrifice his life to save anyone who needs to be saved. While he is tempted by greed and hate, he never succumbs. He does seek to increase his material wealth and shares openly with those who need help. He helps people regardless of their past, their race, their ethnicity, etc.
