On Sunday, April 13, the Penn State Harrisburg chapter of Psi Chi National Honor Society in Psychology held a 5k run/walk on campus to benefit the Vista School for children with autism spectrum disorders. With about 40 participants, they were able to raise almost $900. Door prizes were given, including free dinners, golfing, and an hour of flying time with a local flight instructor. This was the first time the vent was held but the society has hopes to make it a yearly event.

Chancellor Hanes along with faculty and students opened the new main entrance on April 1st. After almost a year of construction, the new lobby features a new elevator along with more space for Biscottis and a conference room on the 3rd floor. Administration says that the renovation was sorely needed in order to update ADA standards and also to make the campus more visually appealing. Plans are currently in the works to decide how to best use the space.

ROCK FOR CHANGE

On April 11th, students and clubs of Penn State Harrisburg held a 8 hour rock concert on the Stacks stage. The Lion Ambassadors, Capital Times, SGA and WPSH all pitched in to raise money and awareness for the Invisible Children Schools for Schools Campaign. The campaign asks schools all across America to raise money to help rebuild schools in Northern Uganda. For the past 20 years, the Lords Resistants Army has been destroying villages and homes in Darfur, forcing citizens to move to displacement camps. Many of the schools are not safe and are run down. Within the past year, Invisible Children has raised over 3 million dollars for the Schools for Schools campaign. Invisible Children also has different campaigns, such as Displace Me: which asks supporters to displace themselves in cities all across the county for 24 hours, to plea with the government to get involved and stop the genocide. 8 local bands, including PSH's own Brunaya provided seemingly endless entertainment for those who attended. Although the concert was free and open to the public, donations were accepted, resulting in a total of about $400 for the night. Overall, the concert was a success and plans are in the works to hold another concert for THON in the fall.
