Journeying with God.

DREARY and long our course may be, But, O our God, it leads to Thee! Thou art the light by which we roam, Thou art our everlasting home.

The grief we feel, the cross we bear But draw us to thy side in prayer: And while our cares are borne by thee Still as our day, our strength shall be.

Thy mighty arm to smooth our way, Thy light to turn our night to day, Onward with firmer steps we roam, On to our everlasting home.

Morning Hymn.

Now that the sun is gleaming bright, Implore we, bending low, That He, the uncreated Light. May guide us as we go.

No sinful word, nor deed of wrong, Nor thoughts that idly rove; But simple truth be on our tongue, And in our hearts be love.

And grant that to thine honor, Lord Our daily toil may tend, That we begin it at Thy word, And in Thy favor end.

Leaning on Thee.

IMANING on Thee, my Guide, my Friend, My gracious Saviour, I am blessed; Though weary, Thou dost condescend To be my rest.

Leaning on Thee, my soul retires
From earthly thoughts and earthly things; On Thee concentrates her desires To Thee she clings.

Leaning on Thee, though faint and weak-Too weak another voice to hear-Thy heavenly accents comfort speak, . 'Be of good cheer.

Leaning on Thee, with childlike faith, To Thee the future I confide; Each step of life's untrodden path Thy love shall guide.

OUT OF WORK.

PETER STANWOOD was a book-binder by trade, and had now been out of employment over a month. He was one of those who calculated generally to keep about square with the world, and who consider themselves fortunate if they keep out of debt. He was now thirty years of age, and had three children to provide for, besides himself and wife, and this, together with the house rent, was a heavy draught upon his purse even when work was plenty, but now there was "Maria," said he, gazing his wife in the face, "we must starve. I have not a single penny in the world."

"But do not despair, Peter. Try again to-morrow for work. You may find something to do. Anything that is honest is honorable. Should you make but a shilling a day, we should not starve." "But our house rent?"

"Trust me for that. The landlord shall not turn us out. If you will engage to find something to do, I will see that we have our bouse room."
"I make one more trial," uttered Peter, despairingly. But you must go prepared to do anything.

"Anything reasonable, Maria." ."What do you call reasonable?"

"Why-anything decent." The wife felt inclined to smile, but the matter was too serious for that, and a cloud passed over her face. She knew her husband's disposition, and she felt sure he would find no work. She knew that he would look for some kind of work which would not lower him in the social scale, as he had once or twice expressed it. However, she knew it would be of no use to speak to him now, and she let the matter pass. No sooner had her husband gone than Mrs.

Stanwood put on her bonnet and shawl. Her eldest child was a girl seven years old, and her youngest four. She asked her next door neighbor if she would take care of her children until noon. These children were known to be good and quiet, and they were taken cheerfully. Then Mrs. Stanwood locked up her house and went away. She returned at noon, bringing her children some dinner, and then went away again. She came home in the evening before her husband, carrying a heavy basket upon her

"Oh-everywhere. I have been to a hundred places, but it is the same in every place. It's nothing but one eternal 'Nono! ' I'm sick and tired of it. I even went so far as to offer to tend a liquor store down The wife smiled.

"Now, what shall we do?" uttered Peter, spasmodically.

"Why, we will eat supper first, and then talk the matter over." "Supper! Have you got any?" "Yes-plenty of it."

"But how-where-what?" kney her girl was sick, and I hoped she bert's character was that of an earnest and might have work to be done. I went to her pains-taking student. A contemporary stu-and told-her my story, and she set me to dent of his says that his dinners were orderwork at once doing her washing. "Don't despair, Peter, for we shall not starve. I've got enough work engaged to keep us alive.

"Ah-what is that?" "Why, Mr. Snow engaged me to carry small packages, baskets, bundles, and so forth, to his rich customers. He has had to give up. one of his horses."

"What do you mean, Maria?" "Just what I say. When Mr. Snow came to his dinner, I was there, and asked him is he ever had light articles which he wished to send around to customers. Never mind all that was said. He did happen to want just such work done, though he meant to call upon the idlers who lounged about the market. He promised to give me all the work he could, and I am to be there in good season in the

"Say, because it will lower me in the social scale?" "Well, so it will."

"Then it is more honorable to lay still and starve, and see one's children starve, foo, than to earn honest bread by honest work. I tell you, Peter, if you cannot find work, I must. We should have been without bread to-night, had I not found work to-day. You know that all kinds of light, agreeable busis ness, are seized upon by those who have particular friends engaged in them. At such times as this, it is not for us to consider what kind of work will do, so long as it is honest. Oh, give me the liberty of my own deserts, and the independence to be governed by my own convictions of right." "But, my wife—only think—you carrying out butcher's stuff. Why, I would sooner go and do it myself." "If you will go," said the wife, with a smile, "I will stay at home, and take care of the children. It was hard for Peter Stanwood, but the more he thought upon the matter, the more he saw the justice and right of the path into which his wife thus led him, Before he went to bed, he promised he would go to the butcher's in the morning.

And Peter Stanwood went upon his new business, Mr. Snow greeted him warmly, praised his faithful wife, and sent him off with two baskets, one to a Mrs. Smith's, and one to a Mrs. Dixall's. And the new carrier worked all day, and when night came he had earned ninety-seven cents. It had been a day of trials, but no one sneered at him. and all his acquaintances whom he met creeted him the same as usual. He was far happier now than he was when at home the night before, for now he was independent. On the next day he earned over a dollar; and thus he continued to work for a week, at the end of which time he had five dollars and seventy-five cents in his pocket, besides having paid for all the food for his family, save some pieces of meat which Mr. Snow had given to carry to Mr. M. It was his former employer, and just as he was entering the yard of his customer, he met him coming

One day Peter had a basket of provisions

"Ah, Stanwood, is this you?" asked his old employer, kindly. "Yes, sir."

"What are you up to now?" "I'm a butcher's boy, sir."

"A what?" "You see I've brought your provisions for you, sir. I'm a regular butcher's boy." "And how long have you been at work

"This is the tenth day." "But don't it come hard?"

"Nothing is hard so long as it is honest, and will furnish my family bread." "And how much can you earn in a day at

"Sometimes over a dollar, and sometimes not over fifty cents."

"Well, look here, Stanwood, there have been no less than a dozen of my old hands hanging around my counting-room for a fortnight, whining for work. They are stout, able men, and yet they lie still, because have no work for them. Last Saturday took pity on Leeds, and offered him the job of doing my hand-carting. I told him I would give him a dollar and a quarter a day, but he turned up his nose and asked me not to insult him. And yet he owned that his family was suffering. But come to my place to-morrow morning, and you shall have something to do, if it is only to hold your bench. I honor you for your manly independence." Peter grasped the old man's hand with a joyous, grateful grip, and blessed him fer-vently. That night he gave Mr. Snow notice that he must quit, and on the following morning he went to the bindery. For two days he had little to do, but on the third day a heavy job came in, and Peter Stanwood had steady work. He was happy—more happy than ever, for he had learned two things; first, what a noble wife he had; and second how much resource for good he held within his own energies. Our simple picture has two points to its moral. One is—no man can be lowered by any kind of honest labor. The secondwhile you are enjoying the fruits of the present, forget not to provide for the future; for no man is secure but the day may come when he will want the squanderings of the past .- Moore's Rural.

The intention of her Majesty to select Prince Albert for her spouse was officially announced to a very full Privy Council, which sat on the 23d of December, 1839. The Queen emphatically declared her belief that the alliance would, "by the blessing of God, secure her domestic happiness and serve the best interests of her country."

The issue of this auspicious marriage has been four sons and five daughters, and we may be allowed to say that rarely has there been so prosperous a union, rarely a pair, gentle or simple, so happy themselves or so blessed in their children.

On settling down in England, the Prince resolved forthwith to make himself master of the prevailing system of law, and jurisprudence, the history of the English Constitutution and the many cognate questions arising out of those subjects which he studied under the direction of Mr. William Selwyn, Queen's Counsel. He also devoted his attention to practical agriculture—had a model farm in the great Park at Windsor, and competed, often successfully, at various agricultural exhibitions. The effect of his example upon the progress of agriculture can scarcely be overrated. It was, in fact, to Prince Albert, that the successful carrying out of the Great Exhibition of 1851, was due, and he was the founder and patron of that expected to be held this year. He encouraged art and science, the education of the poor, and the improvement of the homes of the lower classes by model lodging houses. His speeches, upon various ccasions, testify to the fact, that in the words of Lord Ashburton, the Prince had done his best "to induce the tired mechanic to study beyond the hours of rest, by resigning to science and high art their high due place in the hierarchy of society, by encouraging the scientific institution (of the Society of Arts), and by himself attending its meetings." These speeches deserve a general perusal for their terse style, admirably chosen words, and forcible phrases, many of which are current to this day, though men who use them forget their origin. In 1848, (May 18), he first spoke at length in public, on the improvement of the condition of the laboring classes, and insisted that the interests of all classes were identical. The next year May 16), he eloquently pleaded the cause of the domestic servants out of place. At the Lord Mayor's banquet (March 21, 1850), to the Commissioners of the Exhibition of 1851, his Royal Highness made a long and very able-speech, which created a great sensation. He said emphatically that he "considered it to be the duty of every educated person closely to watch and study the time in which he lived; that there was one great end to be accomplished, the realization of the unity of nankind. The Exhibition of 1851 would cause them to realize the blessings bestowed on them, and also give them the conviction that those blessings would be realized only by living at peace with the rest of the world. His other celebrated speeches were delivered at meetings of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, St. Martha's Hall, June 16, 1851; at the Mansion House, for the Sons of the Clergy, May 10, 1851; and a specially notable defence of Science at Birmingham, Nov. 22, 1854.

This Remedy is a safe and simple preparation from the receipt of the late distinguished Professor Mutter, with whom it was a favorite prescription. That he used it in his extensive practice, insures to the timid a certain proof of its pure and innoxious elements, and to those who know his character for skill and care ful attention, to prescribe only such remedial agents as should secure restoration without producing subse-quent evil, it will be welcomed as a real good. Un-der the guidance of a Physician, (to whom its combination will unhesitatingly be made known), it will always be found beneficial, and in cases where a medical adviser is not at hand, it may be used with safety, according to the directions, in all cases of short or long duration. THE FIRE IN CHESTNUT STREET. Letter from Theo. H. Peters & Co. Philadelphia, January 19, 1860.

Philadelphia, January 19, 1860.

Messas. Farrel, Herring & Co.,
629 Chestnut Street.

Gentlemen:—We have recovered the Herring's Patent Champion Safe, of your make, which we bought from you nearly five years ago, from the ruins of our huilding, No. 716 Chestnut street, which was entirely lestroyed by fire on the morning of the 17th inst.

So rapid was the progress of the flames, before, we could reach the store, the whole interior was one mass of fire. The Safe being in the back partiof the store, and surrounded by the most combustible materials, was exposed to great heat. It fell with the walls of that part of the building into the cellar, and remained impart of the building into the cellar, and remained imbadded in the ruins for more than thirty hours.

The Safe was opened this morning in the presence of a number of gentlemen, and the contents, comprising our books, bills, receivable money, and a large amount of valuable papers, are all safe; not a thing was touched by fire.

Respectfully, yours, THEO. H. PETERS & CO. THEO. H. PETERS & CU.

The above Safe can be seen at our store, where the public are invited to call and examine it.
