

The Family Circle.

A Hymn for the Sabbath.

The following beautiful hymn is from the pen of the Rev. Dr. Wordsworth, canon of Westminster Abbey, and nephew of the poet laureate:

O day of rest and gladness, O day of joy and light, O halm of care and sadness, Most beautiful, most bright; On thee, the high and lowly, Bending before the Throne, Sing, Holy, Holy, Holy, To the Great Three in One.

On thee, at the Creation, The light first had its birth; On thee our salvation Christ rose from depths of earth; On thee our Lord victorious The Spirit sent from Heaven, And thus on thee most glorious A triple light was given.

Thou art a port protected From storms that roused us rise; A garden interwined With streams of Paradise; Thou art a cooling fountain In life's dry, dreary sand; From thee, like Pegasus's fountain, We view our promised land.

Thou art a holy ladder, Where angels go and come; Each Sunday finds us gladder, Nearer to Heaven, our home. A way of rest and gladness, Thou art a day of love; A day of resurrection From earth to things above.

To-day on weary nations The heavenly manna falls; To holy convocations The silver trumpet calls, Where Gospel-light is glowing With pure and radiant beams, And living waters flowing With soul-refreshing streams.

New graces ever gaining From this our day of rest, We reach the rest remaining To spirits of the blest; To Holy Ghost be praised, To Father and to Son; The Church her voice upraises, To Thee, blest Three in One.

A CONTRABAND STORY.

SHOWING HOW WILLIE GRIMBY CHANGED HIS MIND.

"THE UNION," said Mr. Grimby, "must and shall be preserved." No one appearing to controvert this assertion, the senator proceeded to his second proposition: "But, sir, in restoring the Constitution we must act within the Constitution. Everything that belonged to the Union as it was severed in my eyes. If the four millions of blacks were to day-to-day, I would send them back. I would say to them, Return to your masters; the time has not yet come. When Providence sees fit to make you free, in his own good time, and by constitutional means—mark my word, sir, by strictly constitutional means—I shall have nothing to say." "No," continued Mr. Grimby, with a magnanimous wave of his hand, "not that I wish harm to the slave, sir. I am the friend of the slave. No man can more deeply regret the abuses of slavery. It is an evil, it is a wrong, it is a-a-an inconvenience. But sir, we have no right to interfere. We have the Constitution to preserve; and if, sir, in this time of storm and trial, we succeed in preserving the Constitution, our names will go down with unsullied honor to posterity."

And, having pointed his discourse with an admired passage from his latest effort in Congressional eloquence, Mr. Grimby balanced his teacup with the most deliberation, as if the peculiar institution had been at the end of the Federal Government at the other end of his life-work had been the preservation of an exact equipoise between them. The "sir" to whom those weighty remarks were addressed could have been no other than Mr. Grimby's little boy, Willie, who being, like many another little boy, deeply penetrated with a sense of his father's wisdom and importance, drank in with thirsty lips and in a rapt attention, the words of the paternal lips, and sometimes confided to sister Lillian, in their most ingenious hours, that he was learning to be a senator too!

In furtherance of his ambitious plans, Willie had already become the representative of a "numerous and powerful constituency," including first Lillian, then Gip the dog, Mrs. Partington the cat, and all the dolls—wax, wooden, and porcelain—of Lillian's baby-house, and in due season, when the time came, he displayed in their service most have been the hearts of a much harder constituency than that which Lillian commanded; and when the individuals above-mentioned were assembled in the wood-house chamber, serving now the second purpose of "honorable members" from all the States of the Union, Willie was invariably the orator of the day.

Mr. Grimby's oration this morning had proceeded as far as "posterity," when his son and heir left the room, and to work up the theme thus afforded into a telling speech which would draw a tempest of applause from his always appreciative audience. Glancing around to see that a quorum were present—for some of the less active members had not quitted their seats since yesterday's session—the young orator entered upon a labored and forcible argument, proving, to his own satisfaction, that no one has any right to be free except by constitutional means. "If the four hundred millions of little darkeys were at my door to-day," said Willie, "I would say to them, Now look here, fellows, you may think it's very nice to live in a marble house, and have a pony of your own, and get to preserve the Constitution, and it's constitutional for me to play ball and go fishing, and have nice times generally; and it's constitutional for you to hoe potatoes and pick cotton and live in funny little cabins like those in the pictures; and whatever's constitutional is right."

Willie gloried in that word "constitutional," because, by and by, he had just learned to pronounce it without getting tangled among the 's. "So go back, my erring brothers," he continued in a patronizing way; "go back to your little cabins, and remember picking cotton is just as nice as playing ball, if you only think so. I wish you were all free—I do indeed; but I must act, not as a man, but as a patriot. You needn't go back, either," said a merry voice on the stairs. "He doesn't mean any harm; he's only playing Congress."

"Hallo! who's there?" cried the orator, as turning to the door, he saw that his striking supposition had been at least partially fulfilled.

A round, woolly head and two large black eyes had risen above the stairway, where they had been arrested by Willie's exhortation. "I say, little image, what's your name?" continued the boy, as he descended from the rostrum and approached the stranger. Lillian's golden curls and laughing blue eyes now appeared, and her voice broke the embarrassed stillness, for the "little image" was apparently not endowed with the gift of speech.

"He's cold and hungry, Willie. His name is Rob. I was going to take him in to breakfast, but papa was talking so—so grand," said Lily, with a mischievous little smile, "that I couldn't get a word in edgewise. So I thought we would have breakfast up here with my cups and saucers, and oook will make us some cakes."

Lillian's so-called "cups," which she had brought to Congress. "But I say, little one, where did you come from, and where are your father and mother, and why don't you go home and get your breakfast?"

"Ole mass' shot him," said Rob, while a cold shudder ran through his little frame, glancing cautiously around the while, as if feeling that the tale was too terrible for Lillian to hear. "Ole mass' shot him, 'cause he found out Mass' Linkum coming to set him free. And den massa run away wid me that night, and we hid in the bushes and de swamp, and every night we run fast as we can, till massa see give out,—and den she cried and kissed me great many times, and tell me never to stop till I get to de Norf,—and den she fell down, and I couldn't waker her up;—and now she's lying cold and still in the woods."

The sorrowful story came little by little, with many breaks and interruptions; but when it was ended, Willie sat silent on the play-room floor, gazing at Rob, while many new thoughts and feelings were working at his heart, and making some mischief among the muscles of his face. But then senators never cry; neither did Willie.

"Is de Norf, mass'?" said Rob, at length. "Yes, to be sure this is the North, but what do you want of it?" said Willie, not gruffly, only trying to be manly and senatorial.

"Mamma said de good people live here, dat didn't shoot folks 'cause dey wanted to be free. And Rob's berry cold and tired and hungry, and lame," looking down sorrowfully at the little bare, frosted feet, that were bleeding from their pilgrimage over the frozen ground. "Could I sleep here, little while, mass'?" And the poor little way-worn traveler gazed around at the bare floor of the play-room, as if it had been one expanse of downy cushions wooing him to repose.

"Yes, indeed! No, you can't," said Willie; "nobody can sleep on a hard floor. But come along; Lily's play breakfast will never be ready; come and get something to eat, and then we will see where you can sleep."

"Whom have we here!" exclaimed Mr. Grimby in surprise, as his first-born re-entered the room, ushering in his little guest. The worthy senator was not a cruel man at heart, and perhaps was a little annoyed by so prompt an occasion for putting his principles in practice.

"Rob is hungry and would like some breakfast," was Willie's meek reply, as he drew up his own chair to the table. Mr. Grimby, transfixed with astonishment made no remark while the little ebony image was installed in the place of his own curly-haired boy. Nor did he perceive that the balance of power in his tea-spoon was being destroyed, the peculiar institution went down, while the Federal Government triumphantly ascended.

"Now, father, will you please to cut that steak?" continued Grimby the second. "My son, do you know that this is very strange—wrong—improper?" the senator at length found words to say. "I suppose so, father—but, sir," continued the embryo Congressman with deliberate dignity, "whatever, sir, may be said by my learned colleague, I can never consider it constitutional for a boy to go without his breakfast."

The perplexed Mr. Grimby raised his eyes to the sharer of his woes, but, sir, in her logical, womanish way, only answered his appeal by a sudden, merry, musical burst of laughter, which proved so contagious that the excellent senator was swept away from all the moorings of his dignity into a perfectly irresistible flood-tide of merriment, while Willie, never backward on such occasions, bore his part bravely, and Lillian, who at this moment appeared as the door, added her tiny treble, merry and clear as the notes of a young wood-bird, until such a quartet of laughter never was heard in a senator's house before;—the poor little innocent cause of all the disturbance meanwhile turning his eyes from one to another of the group in utter consternation.

Well! thought the wise men of old very wisely said of laughter, "It is mad, and of itself, what death it is," yet, I am prepared to aver that this particular fit of madness had a method in it, and that Mrs. Grimby's untimely mirth produced some important practical results. For, in the first place, Master Willie took advantage of the general good feeling to procure for his protegee the comforts of a warm bath and clean, whole clothing, and a soft bed, where the weary little pilgrim was snoring away the weariness of his night's journeyings. In the second place, Mr. Grimby's objections being once swept away, his utmost force of logic never availed to re-establish them, even though his wife—seconded by his good mamma,—insisted upon adopting the little contraband as a permanent inmate of the household, providing for him food, clothing, and instruction. So after all his storm-tost wanderings, that food-side of hunger was the last slavery surge that lashed the lithe, ontast high and dry on the blessed shores of freedom.

Rob proved a gentle, teachable, and grateful little pupil; and as Willie afterwards remarked to Lillian, that morning's adventure was lucky all round; for it enlarged his constituency, and then it was quite jolly to say "My honored friend from Louisiana," in real earnest. It is remarkable, however, that the Southern element introduced into the juvenile Congress had a contrary effect to that which it has sometimes produced in larger circles; for no four millions of our mass fugitives ever again went away from Willie's imaginary doors, and the young orator was frequently "compelled to differ from his learned friend in the other house" on questions connected with the true means for the preservation of the Union. Willie's visions of slave-land no longer presented picturesque little cabins amid snowy-tufted fields of cotton. The picture was darkened by sadder, sadder scenes; a father lying dead on the plantation, his blood crying to heaven for vengeance on the murderer, and the weary mother sinking down in the forest, just in sight of that promised land of freedom whose brightness was never to gladden her darkened eyes. And Willie prayed more earnestly than ever he had prayed in his life before, that if he grew to be a real law-maker he might be delivered from the horrible sin of gambling in the bodies and souls of men.—Independent.

especially manifest in all the churches, and many of all classes flocked to the house of God. Many men of the sea are among the converts. The work still goes on, having spread to neighboring churches and towns, until the converts number several hundreds.

THE NEW MILITARY LAW.

As this law is of great interest to every one liable to do military duty, as well as their friends and those who are dear to them, we may state that no call will be made at present of any State that has furnished its quota of all the volunteers called out by the President, and also state the mode in which the draft will be conducted.

There will be a provost martial for every Congressional district, and when the district is very large, two or three as the case may require. There will also be one civilian and surgeon of cavalry without officers, being about $118 a month. These persons will constitute the enrolling board, whose duty will be to divide the district into two sub-divisions and appoint for each an enrolling officer, whose duty will be to make the enrollment. Immediately after his appointment the enrolling officer is to proceed to make the enrollment in such manner that each class shall be enrolled separately, and the age of the person enrolled is to be set down on the list as it will be on the first day of July succeeding the date of the enrollment. That is if any person is not twenty, but will be on the first of July next, he is to be placed on the list; or if any married man is not thirty-five now, but will be on the first of July next, he is not to go in the first class, but in the second class; or if any man is liable to do military duty, not over forty-five years of age, but will be on the first day of July next, he is not placed on the list at all.

All persons thus enrolled are liable to do military duty for two years from the first of July after enrollment, and if carried into the service shall continue during the rebellion, but no longer than three years. The second class will not be called out till after the first class shall have been called out. When the President shall make a call, he will assign to each district the number it must furnish; and the enrolling board shall make a draft of that number and fifty per cent. additional, and make a complete roll in the order in which the names are drawn. The drafted men will stand precisely on the same footing with the three year volunteers in respect to pay and bounty as provided by law. Allowance is to be made in respect to numbers in each district for those volunteers already furnished for the war.

The person drawn is to be notified within ten days, and he is to repair to the rendezvous or pay a substitute designated by the Secretary of War before the day of assembling—the sum to be paid is to be uniform, and not to exceed $300. Every person failing to report in person or by substitute, or paying the stipulated sum, shall be considered and treated as a deserter.

The bill is a good one generally, but we think it would have been more just if the sum to be paid had been a per centage on what the person drawn was worth by the assessment of his property or the amount of his taxes. The poor man, whose family may be mainly depending on support from his labor, would be asked to give thousands, who are worth nothing, and whose only means of care the stroke of a pen whether drafted or not. Many lukewarm supporters of the Government think that this law is similar to the one passed by the rebels. It is not so. The rebel act takes all persons between certain ages leaving none behind, while our law takes only the required number out of all enrolled. The rebels take all they can lay their hands on, old or young.

Many districts have furnished all and in such we believe, with proper exceptions, no draft will be required should a call be made. Hundreds of thousands comprising those not yet furnished for the last call of the President, and deserters from the army, which, if now in service as they should be, would give us a large enough army to sweep the rebellion out of existence in a very short time. Let us, then, all stand firmly by our Government in its efforts to crush the rebellion, and perpetuate to future generations that nestorable blessing of liberty.—Christian Instructor.

RELIGIOUS READING IN THE ARMY. A LETTER received from a young soldier acknowledging a package of reading sent by the Boston Tract Society, gives emphatic testimony to the usefulness of such publications in the army. He says of himself: "I have been in the service nineteen months. When I first volunteered for my country, I was a wild, reckless man, but I bless God I did not remain so long. I had not been in the service over two months, when I was in the battle of Peak Mountain, but not without a friend. I had a brother, and I believe he was true Christian. When we were led up in line of battle, my brother was by my side, and he whispered these words in my ear: 'I will fall in this battle, but I fall for my country, and God will take my soul.' And, true enough, the third round was not fired before I held him in my arms, shot through the breast, but apparently in no pain. I shall never forget the words he spoke to me. 'Oh, says he, 'are we whipped?' I told him 'no.' 'Go, says he, 'to your post and fight; it is a good cause, and I am willing to die.' He took me by the hand and said: 'O, brother be a praying man, and then you need not fear death.' He made me take all the things out of his pocket, and among them was a tract, headed, 'Come to Jesus.' When he saw me looking at it, he asked me what it was. I told him, 'Yes,' says he, 'that is the old tract that made me what I am.' Says he, 'brother, read it, and keep it, and pray God to forgive you.' I have done as he bid me, and I have rest in my mind. I believe God has done all for me that can be done for man in this world. I feel best, and I have a hope of seeing my brother in heaven."

DR. GUTHRIE in a late address on church ornamentation told the following: On one occasion he remembered a lady with whom he was in conversation spoke in a fault-finding way in regard to the expense of some ornamentation made on his own church, and she asked "Do you know how many Bibles have been bought with the money you have spent in that manner? Well, he answered by taking hold of a massive silk gown which she then wore, and asking the lady, "How many Bibles do you think the price of that would buy?"

Miscellaneous.

The Temperance men at Wellfleet, Mass., got together in January and resolved to stop the sale of spirituous liquors. They visited the dealers and told them they would pay for all on hand and pour it into the street, if the dealers would agree to purchase no more. The proposition was assented to by all. Very soon after, the spirit of God was
