buried, with an inscription doing some justice to his glorious memory, and going into some particulars of his history, we decided on the following, which, before this reaches you, will be in its place—namely: "ON THIS SPOT lived, taught and died, JOHN ROBINSON. 1611-1626."

We intend this merely as an index-finger, pointing securely to the spot, and preserving its memory in the minds of all, as identified with him and his work.

We feel that it is very desirable, indeed, that before many years, a funeral monument, of a character to take worthy place by the side of those with which the church is already so full, should be erected on the walls of St. Peter's; and should carry, in Latin, Dutch, and English, the story of what he was and what he did. We have made some inquiry in that direction, and have satisfied ourselves that there will be, not only no difficulty in receiving permission from the proper authorities to erect such a monument, but a hearty co-operation, on their part, towards such an endeavor. We hope that ten years will not pass away, before a suitable position in these inner towering walls (we have in our own minds fixed upon one as very eligible and probably easy to be obtained) will be occupied by a properly ornamented slab, costing at least $1,000 one thousand dollars, and calling the attention of the continental world to the consideration of the hallowed dust that sleeps somewhere beneath these spacious aisles. (5) We have thoroughly reconnoitered all the halls of record here, and have not only compared all the transcripts which we before had with their originals, in the various archives (making some important corrections), but have been able to get some new and very important light upon some of the most perplexing of the many questions which center in the Leyden residence of the Plymouth men. It is really wonderful how perfect the Dutch system of record, in many aspects, is; and it gives one a sense of antiquity which is novel and thrilling, to look up, in the rich archives of the Stadt-huis, and see the interminable rows of vellum-covered folios, reaching far back into the sixteenth century, and holding themselves brim-full of information in regard to ten or twelve generations of Dutchmen, and of those who have consorted with them, as our fathers did. It was wonderful to see the precision with which each page, even two or three centuries ago, bore its own record, the writing being often so distinct, and the paper, ink, and accessories so good, that (with an eye not, indeed, unaccustomed to decipher ancient hand-writing) I was often able to read the antique Dutch without hindrance from the double difficulty of the strangeness of the language and of the chirography. Prof. Day's familiarity with German and Dutch stood us in constant service; and I feel that, so far as a work has been accomplished, with his help, the Leyden traces of the Plymouth Colony are worked out, which it would have been almost, if not quite, impossible to have accomplished in any other way.
