EXECUTIVE.

Attorney General Stanbery's opinion on the powers of the military commanders under the Reconstruction act is that the military, except in cases of particular emergency, are to remain passive, merely co-operating with the civil authorities to preserve order; also, that military commanders have no power, under the act, to remove any State officers, or to fill vacancies in the departments of the State governments. Such vacancies must be filled by popular election. Neither, according to the Attorney General, do the military authorities possess any executive power. In the trial of offenders the military may supercede civil jurisdiction in certain emergencies, the measure of punishment being discretionary with the military courts. [Let us have an extra session of Congress to revise that opinion.]
