The Progress of Doctrine in the . New Testament.

New Testament. Lectures delivered before the University of Oxford, on the "Bampton Foundation," by Thomas Dehaney, Bernard, of Exeter College, and Rector of Walcot. 12no; clott." $150. A work of extraordinary ability and interest, and which is commanding a large sale. Second edition just issued. A for this volume is one of the finest specimens of the use of the English language we have lately seen. Dr: Hovoy, in his preface to the American edition, truly says of these lectures; "The views which they express are fresh and corvincing, and the language in which they are presented is clear as crystal, revealing every thought and shade of thought with absolute distinctness. There is not, I believe, a dark or dult-sontence in the volume." The an-thor shows the propriety of the present arrangements of the New Testament, traces the enunciation of doctrine in the different parts of that wonderful book, and shows how God's revelation to man was at length fully completed. He most affectually disposes of the attempt made by errorists now to give pre-eminence to the Gospels and to reject the Epistles, thus aiming a blow at the entire Word of God. The minister who stidles this series carefully, will ind his mind greatly strengthened, and be wonderfully assisted in preparing to contend for the truth as it is in Jesus. The intelli-gent layman will also be much instructed and greatly pleased with the perusal of suice a volume as this. ALSO,

ALSO.

Rawlinson's Historical Evidences of the Truth of the Scripture Records, Stated Anew,

With special reference to the Doubts and Discoveries of Modern to time for a score of years past have been emanating from the pens of one or the other of the Misses S. & A. Warner. "The Three Little Spades" are in the hands of three children whose first experience in gardening, from the selection of seeds to the coming on of autumn, is narrated in that picturesque, gently attractive and wholesome way which is almost a speciality with these truly Christian writers for the young. We commend the book both to those children who have gardens and to those who have none, quite sure it will prove highly entertaining to both. In juvenile literature it will hold a place analogous to that of My Farm of Edgewood among the books for mature minds. . It is handsomely printed and bound, and is a valuable addition to Messrs. Harpers' fast increasing catalogue of good juveniles.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY, for January, (Leon-ard Scott Publishing Co., N. Y., Phila.: W. B. Zieber, ) commences with an article on Lockhart's Life of Walter Scott, which is remarkable as the first article on these long standard volumes which has ever appeared in that journal. The reason is that Lockhart, the author, was for a long time the managing editor of the London Quarterly. The reviewer thinks it important that the work shold be done, not only because both Scott and his biographer are dead, but because the memory even, of both of them seems in danger of passing away. The writer says truly: "When we find such great works as Waverley, Guy Man-nering, and The Antiquary cast aside, in order that young ladies and young gentlemen may break their, hearts over the sorrows of bigamists and adulterers, we confess that the impression made upon our minds is not very flattering we do not say to the tastes, but to the moral sense of the age " A perusal of the article would be one of the most effectual means of reviving the purer tastes and interest associated with this honored name in literatue. The Queen's Book is spoken of as possessing "the charm which perfect naturalness combined with exquisite gracefulness might give to another writer" with the added interest which the writer's position. gives her. Private Confession in the Church of England is a temperate argument to show that the practice as urged by the Ritualista has no position of the writer may be judged from the fact that the effort to introduce the practice of Conference in the the same. Chapman's Travels in the Interifoundation in the Standards of the Church. The Confession is called " a distinct anti-Reformation movement-a systematic attempt to undo the work of the sixteenth century." The British Museum is the repetition of a plea made ten years ago in this Review for increased accommotions to the vast and rapidly growing collections of objects of interest in that truly great National Institution. The statistics given show that in ten years, 10,320 MSS., 33,526 coins and medals, 393,674 objects of zoology, 51,681 of geology, 46,564 prints and drawings, and 21,507 minerals have been added without any increase of space. Many offers of valuable additions have to be de clined, and many departments are almost entirely stored away out of sight except when especially cilled for. Longevity and Centenariansm is a pleasant gossiping article, suited rather to the lighter monthlies than to a Quarterly." Phenicia and Greece traces the connection between those two countries. Poseidon, commonly but incor-rectly rendered Neptune, is believed to be a Phenician deity. Church Progress is a view of the financial improvement in the condition of the Church of England with reference to the question of founding three new Bishoprics. What shall we do for Ireland? closes the number.
