A LOVE STORY
By DAVID

Fore!! Ning! plunk—Joshu Ramuloni, B.M.O.C., dropped in his fourth hole-in-one for the morning, sighed for three whole seconds, and then nonchalantly hopped on one foot towards the club house. His three female caddies quickly scurried to pick up his silver-striped ball from the cup and his scattered diamond-chipped clubs from the tee. Constance, the brown-haired, blue-eyed darling gazed hungrily as Ramuloni zoomed away in his ice-cream wagon. But what could she, poor girl caddy, working her way through college, have or even hope that the great Joshu would notice her? Shy, sweet, demure Constance. Suddenly she hit upon a right jolly idea! Constance carefully folded the convertible clubs, stacked them into her tote-bag, and smiling slyly tip-toed off the course.

"Good show" came a voice from behind a nearby ginko tree. "Lawdy" cried Constance and she gasped again. She continued her crawling, but swiftly shifted her left eye toward the strange voice. From her glance she noticed that a 6'1", blond, green-eyed boy, dressed in green suede jacket two shades lighter than his eyes, desert boots and brown plaid short-shorts was pondering upon the neat ditch Constance had plodded around the brush. "I haven't the foggiest," he said to himself. The boy took a few pirouettes and stopped directly in front of Constance. Doffing his chartruese jockey's cap, he said "Tennis anyone?" Constance stopped for a moment, dug into her pocket and slowly said, "Would you care for a throat disc?" Suddenly she forgot about Joshu, the lost golf ball, the convertible clubs, and the ice-cream wagon. They gazed at each other for three-quarters of a second. He dropped his tennis racket. "Chemistry," she sighed.

On the campus, Constance never came in contact with the short-shorts world of Joshu Ramuloni. But on this particular day the girl-caddy broke her daddy's heart by pouring herself into a pair of medium length short-shorts and trotted off to the daisy fields behind the campus. Immediately after flattening down three clusters of buttercups, Constance set one of Ramuloni's shiny golf balls on a five-inch tee. She unfolded the wood and methodically sliced the ball into the rows of arbor-vitae. "Lawdy!" she exclaimed, then gasped. Scampering over to the shrubs she let two tears drop down her right cheek, but quickly pulled out her eye-dropper and placed them carefully into an empty aspirin bottle. Soon she was down on her knees crawling through the arbor-vitae and searching frantically for the precious ball.

Then the snows came. Ed. note—Eine Tragedie. in Zwei Paragraphum (For German students). This was formerly known as the 4th sub-title, but the name has been shortened in order to save much needed copy space. The story is adapted from the original of the great Russian writer, Edvok Alexei Poeski, and it was entitled Count Dracula's Youth.

A switching and synchronizing panel is being installed in the E. E. lab. This circuitry is to be used in conjunction with the new alternator, installed last month. The unit will provide added three-phase facilities for experiments and demonstrations.

Just because Prof. Bair isn't wearing his glasses these days is no reason for his students to consider cutting corners. He is one of the few possessors of contact lenses in the country. Being well pleased with the lenses, he has given much interesting information about them to his classes.

Student participation in the forthcoming Science Exhibition, to be held May 4th in Erie Hall, is strongly encouraged.

Something must be done to prevent the E. E. lab generators from scaring Dr. Smith's white rats.

Many future plans are in store for the expansion of our lab facilities. When work is completed, the Biology Lab will be located in its new quarters on the second floor of Turnbull Hall. Presently existing laboratory area and that of the adjacent classroom, will be remodeled and extended far into the hall. The entire lab area will then be divided between the E. E. and Physics Departments.

Office News

Spring seems to have brought with it the travel bug for our office and administrative staff.

Pretty, perky, Peggy Forbes, our receptionist, traveled to Louisville, Kentucky; while Helen Adams jaunted to Buffalo and the wide open spaces of our northern neighbor recently. To assist her in her travels, Mrs. Adams purchased a steel-gray, push-button, swept-wing Dodge, with a red interior.

She certainly is a busy woman. Despite her wanderings, she has been elected vice-president of the Business and Professional Women's Club of Erie for 1958-59, and also elected as a delegate to their state convention on May 16-18. Flash! She has finally finished her knit suit!
