ROVING REPORTER

Some students saw Penn State for the first time during All-University Day. On this basis, The Roving reporter has questioned students at random as to whether a large or small school is more advantageous.

Pete Eichenlaub tells us "I think starting school as a freshman at Behrend has advantages over University Park. Here you get to know the kids better because it is a small, friendly school. Down State everyone seems to be going in other directions."

Luke Holzen feels "at Behrend, one can accept this change from high school to college- then the idea of just being a number is easier to take."

John Messina put it quite adequately: "I would not get anything done. There's too much going on."
