

On the Spot

Here's our on-the-spot-reporter at the bottom of the treacherous short cut to the O.B. Building where we find a large group of students.

On-the-spot-reporter: "What seems to be the problem here?"

Joe Student:(Stepping over an accumulation of bodies) "One of the professors tripped over his bell-bottoms and caused an avalanche. But, it really wasn't his fault. The snow and ice has been building up for 40 days and 40 nights."

O.S.R.: "Don't you have a snow plow?"

J.S.: "Yes, but the guy who drives it doesn't like to come out on cold days. But, it's not so bad. Sometimes Dean Lane stands at the top of the hill and throws a handful of sawdust on the ice."

O.S.R.: "Is sawdust the only safeguard on the short cut?"

J.S.: "No, half-way down there's a hand rail made of a warped bamboo pole supported by 2 sapplings."

O.S.R.: "Do you have any suggestions for students planning to ascend the hill?"

J.S.: "Yes, wear football cleats and carry a .22 to ward off attacks by roving mountain goats which reside in the area."
