

No Color Pages In '69 Bits of Behrend

Due to insufficient funds, the Yearbook will not be able to publish the promised color section in this year's yearbook. The cancellation of this section points out that the yearbook is not now able to function with a quality comparable to most college books. It also implies that this status will not be achieved in the near future. The reason is failure of the University to fulfill its fiscal obligation to University publications. This fact may be exemplified by the 1969 Behrend book.

The book was granted an allocation of $400 after asking for $1000. The staff has generated $1600 locally through subscriptions and advertising. Since the total cost of publication of our planned book is $2500 and the above figures add up to $2000, the staff lacks $500 for publication. Since the color section cost $450, it was eliminated. Still, the staff will have to limit spending to break even. There is but one answer to the fiscal predicament—the University must meet its fiscal obligation to support a University publication that is governed, sanctioned, and traditionally demanded by that University. Either the University must meet its obligation, or the yearbook must be discontinued due to an inability to operate at a level of quality sufficient to merit publication.
