THE SICK WORLD

ELMO

Oftentimes I have heard a person say, "Joe's father died; I have to go to the funeral." Is this what funerals and viewings are for--merely the showing of social grace by the bereaved or the bereaved's family's friends? I don't think so. However, the vast majority of the establishment, and the younger generation as well, seem to feel this way. The viewing of the body and the funeral are meant to symbolize a final parting of friends and/or acquaintances and/or enemies. If you (in general) feel no emotion or compulsion to attend a funeral or funeral home I feel it is wrong to go just for appearances. Sincerity.

Advertisers, with their psychological hold over millions of people, are perverting many persons' viewpoints. Recently I read an advertisement which proclaimed: "Steve and I have been swinging together ever since I started using Angel Face Medicated Make-Up." This infers that only a person with a beautiful complexion will have fun, dates, and happiness. Such advertisements are subverting such virtuous ideas as "beauty is only skin deep" which, although ancient by today's youths' standards, still is true. I feel that the youth should protest such trashy advertising even if they have to stoop to boycotting the perpetrators' products. We don't want bull****. We want reality-idealistic reality.
