

DUTIFUL DEED DOERS

Anyone who wants to do something for your fellowman, stand around. Behrend is searching for talent--the sneaky, underhanded kind, even. Anyone who would like to donate books or records--the Rascals, Doors, Hendrix, etc. please bring them forth QUICKLY.

The library would like a larger supply for the few people who like to shoplift, but don't have enough nerve to go to a store where they may have some mechanical eye watching them. [Libraries are quite unobserving]. If we don't get any donations to keep up with the demand, the supply of soul and psychedelic records will remain at the level it's been forced to..... nearly nothing.

"Au Revoir Monsieur Charles!"

RSK.

A thorn in the side of many, a restorer of the pride of many Charles DeGaulle has retired from his post as the President of France. The 78 year-old former general has been criticized by some and canonized by others, but one thing is certain, none ignored him.

In actuality, Charles DeGaulle has done more for France than has any other person this century. "Le Grand Charles" was molding France into a world power after his homeland was mercilessly pounded into submission by the power-crazed Hessian hordes of Germany during World War II, but in doing so he was unconcerned with who he "stepped on". He threw out NATO, Great Britian, and the United States in moves to re-establish French individuality.. These moves, unfortunately, didn't encourage tourists and therefore the mercantile populace became disenchanted with DeGaulle.

The youth of France became rebellious because the anglo-American idealistic movement had been introduced and instilled in them. The seeds of displeasure were sown, and they sprouted last week, ending one of the most individualistic personalities of today's political career. He played his own hand but his joker turned up.
