Behrendites Attend Wash. Moratorium

Friday night, November 14, five students left Behrend Campus and headed for the Moratorium rally in Washington, D. C. They were John Cartus, Eva Dempsey, Blair Rudes, Matt Hannon, and Marsha Gelman. At 9:00 a. m., Saturday morning, they joined the other hundred of thousand people present in the mall between the Capital building and the Washington Monument. The crowd was exuberant and eagerly anticipated the rally ahead. The enormous size of the crowd and the signs and banners present everywhere gave one the impression of the whole world getting together there for a moral crusade.

At 10:00 a. m. the march began. The people were grouped into contingents according to their States, colleges, professions, political leanings, etc. After two and one half hours, the permit for the use of Pennsylvania Avenue ran out, but only approximately 50,000 people had paraded. The other hundreds of thousands of people had to turn around and head for the Washington Monument across the mall.

At 1:00 p. m. the rally began. One of the first performers was Arlo Guthrie, who led the people in singing, "This Land is Our Land." He was followed by such artists as Richie Havens; Peter, Paul and Mary; Pete Seger, a string quartet from the Cleveland Philharmonic; and the entire New York cast of "Hair." Also present were speakers such as Mrs. Martin Luther King, Senator George McGovern, Senator Charles Goodell, Dick Gregory, Dr. Benjamin Spock, and Leonard Bernstein.

Also Timothy Leary, Abbie Hoffman, Jerry Rubin, Dick Smothers and Earl Scruggs were there, too. Audience participationers led to the two most emotional during the performances of sing-events of the day. The first was when Richie Havens led the crowd in singing the Beatles' song, "All's

We Are Asking, Is Give Peace a Chance." The hills on which the people were seated seemed to change into oceans of peace symbols as hands waved and people sang. The second event was when the cast of "Hair" led everyone in singing "Let the Sunshine In" at which time numerous doves were released above the crowd. This brought to a close the scheduled events of the rally proper.

But it seemed that the Weathermen, a violent group, had something else planned. Led by Hoffman, Bellinger, and Rubin, the Weathermen and allies marched to the Department of Justice, removed the American flags present there, and raised the flag of North Vietnam. Non-violent groups, hoping to avoid trouble, lowered the North Vietnamese flag and replaced the American ones. Trouble broke out between the two groups, and the police arrived. They fired DM-1, an arsenic compound which is similar to tear gas, into the observers in order to disperse them. The police then attempted to apprehend the violent group, but failed, disorder continued throughout the night. Some of the Weathermen were shot and many were arrested.

Although the Weathermen did participate in the Moratorium rally, the violence they caused afterwards was in no way related to that rally.

Building To Be Ready By July

by Chuck Varesko

The completion date of the new laboratory classroom building is scheduled for July 15, 1970. When completed the building will be a two story complex. The first floor will contain two large Biology Labs, a drafting room, an animal room, and seven offices for fourteen faculty members. The second story will be made up of five single classrooms, one double classroom and two drafting rooms. A fifteen space staff parking lot will be built adjoining the complex and the total cost will be $328,224.

The architects, a local Erie firm are Gray, Weber & Kern. The construction is being done by the H. Platt Company, heating by the R. E. North Company, plumbing by the Vieth Plumbing Company, and wiring by the Trico Electric Company. At this time work is about 25% completed with 33% of the construction time elapsed.

The building is formally known as the Library Job, but contains no library. When Penn State asked the General State Authority to construct the building they asked for a library and classroom complex. Due to cutbacks in the State Budget it became impossible to build both. The need for classroom and laboratory facilities was the more important need and construction was started on them. Due to some oversight the General State Authority forgot to change the name of the project and so it remains the Library Job.
