Behrend Forensic Union To Appear On Local TV

Behrend's Forensic Union yesterday announced its Spring term schedule, featuring a series of debates against the neighboring team from Edinboro State College. At least four public debates are planned, two of which will be shown over the local educational television station WQLN (Channel 54).

The first debate, "Resolved, that the U. S. should adopt a policy of mandatory social or military service for all young adults", is scheduled for April 14 at Edinboro State College and will be rebroadcast over WQLN-TV on Tuesday, April 21 at 8 p. m.

Behrend debaters will return to Edinboro May 4th to re-debate the subject before 500 Edinboro speech students. Tentatively scheduled for May is another TV debate, to be held before the Behrend Speech 200 sections, concerning the legalization of marijuana.

Participating in the series will be Roger Nuber, John Musala,

Howard Leslie, Dave Carr, Marsha Hamm and Rusty Larson. Teams for the television debates will be selected on the basis of intra-squad competition. Interested students are invited to contact Nuber or John Spielmann, advisor.

Nuber also reported that the Forensic Union hoped to expand its soapbox debates this term. Students having topics they would like discussed publicly can submit suggestions to the CUB office.

Edinboro Girls Hit Cold Spot

By Dave Tabolt

Frigid women, take heart! Finally, someone is doing something about cold showers.

Unfortunately, not at Behrend, however.

In what may be a precedent, 200 irritated students at Southwest State College in Marshall, Minn., were granted a $10 refund for cold showers in their dormitory.

The story, carried nationally by the Associated Press, explained that the Minnesota State College Board approved the rebate after it heard the student's problem from the college's vice-chancellor.

The board also approved a request for $8300 to buy new water heaters.

It was the second time in recent weeks that hot water made the news on college campuses.

Women Satisfied With Being Inferior To Men

University Park, Pa.—According to the newly elected head of women's government at The Pennsylvania State University, most women are still satisfied to be just a little bit lower than men.

"You hear a lot about women's liberation these days," says Lynn Mack. "But I don't believe that too many coeds subscribe to it."

The 19-year-old Erie native isn't about to take sides as to whether they're right or wrong. "It's just a fact," she observes. Although she is still only a sophomore, Lynn has just been installed as president of AWS, the Association of Women Students, at the University. In this post, she is supposed to act as a spokesman for Penn State women in general.

She firmly believes that students should be responsible for their own lives. This includes allowing them to set their own hours and visitation on rules in campus residence halls, to live off campus if they choose, or to be issued keys to their dormitories.

"College," she explains, "should be a sort of go-between period. As high schoolers, students have lived under pretty thorough parental control. And once they've graduated, they're completely unsupervised.

"College should offer them the chance and the time to grow up. They can't be protected indefinitely. And since women are just as responsible as men, there's no reason why the rules should discriminate against them."

Lynn also feels that coeds be allowed to decide for themselves when men can visit their dorms.

"Girls tend to be conservative," she notes. "They'll set up a system guaranteeing some degree of insured privacy."

Lynn came to Penn State determined to be more than a number on a large campus. In her freshman year, her dormitory elected her a floor representative to AWS Council. This year she has served as a member of AWS Senate, which initiates legislation concerning women students.

It was the Senate, for example, which procured keys for women so they could come and go as they pleased in their residence halls.

Currently, the Senate is considering the problem of reforming the admissions policy for Penn State where the male-female undergraduate ratio is about 17,000 men to 8,000 women.

"It's a hot potato," Lynn admits. "The University has a number of colleges like Agriculture, Earth and Mineral Sciences, Engineering, and Science which attracts a majority of male applicants. But admissions to the other colleges should be more nearly equal."

Act Now To Save Our Environment

The massive "Teach-In on the Environment" scheduled to take place on more than a thousand college campuses April 22 offers dramatic hope that further destruction of our planet may be stopped, according to Senator Gaylord (D-Wis.), the man who started the project rolling.

Writing in the April Reader's Digest, Sen. Nelson recalls that he first proposed the national environmental teach-ins in a speech at Seattle last fall.

"We expected the response to be good," he writes. "It has been tremendous. A thousand colleges and universities are expected to participate, along with hundreds of high schools; civic groups, garden clubs, the League of Women Voters and conservation organizations have also offered a helping hand to make the day a success."

While local projects will form the major focus of the April 22 Teach-Ins, Sen. Nelson suggests that the concerns voiced on that day may lead ultimately to "some radical changes in our national habits."

"Are we prepared, for example, to make economic modifications in our system to reverse the disastrous trend . . . to dispose of disposable bottles . . . to levy some kind of tax to assure that junk cars are collected and recycled . . . to say to the oil companies that they must not drill offshore . . . to develop a land-use policy, to say, 'You must not destroy anymore?'"

The Teach-Ins will help to dramatize these questions. But April 22 will be a success only if it sparks "a national commitment to do something," Sen. Nelson writes.

CRAZY CHERYL'S CAMPUS . . .

My compliments to the administration concerning registration day. It was very organized and students were processed rather swiftly. Now all you have to do is clean up the pre-registration zoo.

Warning to all vehicles smaller than Mack trucks: Hazardous driving conditions have been posted here at Behrend campus. It seems the holes in the roads have been seen swallowing cars.

How do you catch a sparrow? Put salt on his tail.

Rumor has it that the boys' dorm was fumigated over Easter vacation for lice. What about it boys?

Destruction to the rooms in the dorms is getting pretty bad. So is the lifting of another person's possessions. You guys have to live there and they're your friends so wise up.
