

ROTC

On May 21, the annual will be held in Hazleton. This year, many innovations have been planned to make the day more interesting and more significant to every one. A one-hour parade has been planned with a jet fly-over during the day. The parade, which will start at 1:30, will move from McKenna's Corner in West Hazleton to the end of Broad Street in Hazleton. The Hazleton Center Detachment of ROTC will march in the parade, with the drill team marching in lead position so that their different routines can be executed effectively. On Sunday, May 22, the Hazleton Airport will be dedicated, with a Brig.Gen. from the Marines, slated as the principle speaker. At the airport, the Navy has placed two aircraft, an AD type and an F2F Grumman fighter. These planes will be on display all day with ramps provided to enable people to look into the planes. The Air Force is flying a C-45 and 47 into the airport on that day and 37 of the cadets plus several members of the faculty will be going on flights in these planes during the day.

This coming Saturday, the Drill Team will serve as the Honor Guard for the crowning of the queen. The boys, decked in their white accessories, will stand at attention to the side of the procession with the clanking of rifles and snappy movements, and later several light-footed members will take part in the dancing on the green.

The annual AFROTC Awards will be given out on Monday, May 23. These awards are given each year to cadets who have distinguished themselves during the past year. There will be two medals given, one each for the outstanding Freshman and the outstanding Sophomore cadet, the Convair Trophy given to the cadet, either Sophomore or Freshman, who has distinguished himself in all activities, and a drill team citation given to the cadet who has shown the most interest and ability in the drill team activities.

FINAL EXAMS

Spring is sprung,
The grass is riz.
I wonder where
The students is?

This seems to be the saying of all the teachers here at Highacres lately. Before too many more days pass, you'll probably hear the teachers reciting this little verse in class and their answer won't be long in coming.

In just two short weeks, the final exams will begin. The schedule for these exams has been published and is not available in the main office. Pick up a copy and check it for your exams. If you find any conflicting schedules, please notify the main office before May 18.
