This year the Collegian staff under new faculty and student management hopes to provide a college paper that is informative, interesting and adult in its articles. [Quite frankly, this is not the type of paper to which the students of this college have been accustomed during the past few years.] [The blame for this can be placed on no one person's shoulders - but on everyone's shoulders.] Everyone decided to let his neighbor - who of course had a much easier schedule - publish the school paper. Because of the you-do-it-I'm-too-busy attitude, an undersized staff working under terrific pressure was forced to publish the paper; the reporters and editors, in order to fill the pages, substituted quantity for quality. This will not be done this year.

If there is to be a regular Collegian, there will first be a regular working staff of at least twelve reporters and several typists. By "regular working" is meant reliable and efficient writers who always meet their deadline, check their facts, and write their articles clearly.

A college paper written by this type of student keeps everyone informed on the 1,001 extra curricular - and curricular - things that go on at Penn State. It contains little news items that are important for many students.

Work done for the Collegian is rewarded by Parnassus which last year raised the maximum points anyone from editor to proof-reader to typist to reporter can receive.

The Collegian staff, as it now reorganizes itself, has many opportunities for any student interested.
