

Linda Lovely

(To be read with a rather open mind.)

Hi ho, fans! Boy, life certainly has been hectic lately! After finishing all of those manuscripts that they call homework, I crawled off across the deserted campus to a little ivy-covered building which, oddly enough, turned out to be the library. There I just completely collapsed. (Sigh! It's a good thing that I'm not afraid of mice!) Eeeeeeeeee! (Oh well!)

I can see that ye ole school schedule has listed a few interesting episodes to come in the near future. Right? Right!

As a scintallating example, let's begin with the sorority hayride. You gals had better get busy and meet those cute little cadets(?) Let's go team!!!

Say, you all better keep healthy these days because a little old "germ" seems to be making a tour of the continent right now, Sooooo! ("This is Bucky Beaver, better watch those kind of germs! First cousin to "decay" germ you know! Use Ipana! It's good for everything, something like almost-----.)

By the way, I just thought that you all might like to drop me a bomb ----- uh, line, so here is my new address!

1313 Cemetary Road
Graveyard, Pema.

I had a visitor the other day at my new abode. Where he came from, I'll never know, but fortunately the rodents were on their best behavior, when my friend (?) arrived. Said friend had only one small complaint. I took the rats down for their "flu shots" (under pressure, of course!) bright and early the next day. Well, I wasn't too bright even though it was early.

I know that you all thought that you were rid of me with the last issue, eh what? Well now, that's a true gem ----- because you're certainly not. I dare say that I hope you read this cotton pickin' thing like a man, (or a mouse as the case may be.)

This is Lin, your old reliable scandal-maker ending this week's gutter news!

Bye-Bye Love!!
