

PROPOSED SUMMER SESSIONS ANNOUNCED

During the last few years Penn State has been putting much stress on their summer sessions. Here at HIGHACRES this trend has been noticable. Every year a few more courses are added to the schedule. Notable this year is the proposed addition of the courses, Bacteriology 1 and Zoology 41, both of which have been added specifically for the benefit of the Medical Technology associate degree students.

Lists of the proposed summer courses are available in the main office. The lists include instructions for registration, fees, etc.

DRIVERS MUST MAKE OUT NEW CARDS

All persons who drive to school are requested to pick up a form in the main office and fill it out. Since the new license tags are out, the cards filled out last semester are of no use. Persons driving different cars to school are reminded that a card must be made out for each vehicle.

GROUND BROKEN FOR NEW STUDENT UNION

Shortly after 10 a.m. Saturday, April 12, Ted Minor, Student Council President, Betty Anne Ficek, Council secretary, and Frances Werpshaw, Council member, broke ground for the new student union building here.

The large delegations of Hazleton Education Council and Ladies Auxiliary members present for the informal ceremony were headed by their respective presidents, Mr. Roland Edmunds, and Mary Beth Bommer.

Designed by Architect Harry Lentz, the new building will be constructed just west of the formal gardens, some 150 feet from the main building. Its one wall will be constructed almost entirely of glass to allow a view of Conyngham Valley from the building's two levels.

The building, which will include a recreation room, kitchen, cafeteria, and various student activity rooms, is expected to be completed by September.

ROTC NEWS

The Drill Team is practicing regularly Monday, Wednesday, and Friday morning at 7:30 for the May Day Parade.

Inside sources say that the Rifle Team and Fencing Club are finally going to be reorganized. Watch for announcements concerning this.

JOURNALIST HAS LIFE'S FRONT ROW SEAT, STUDENTS AT PENN STATE CLINIC TOLD

"The journalist has a front row seat in life and is allowed to get closest to the exciting things and events so he can tell us about them," 65 high school students were told last Saturday at a journalism clinic here, at HIGHACRES.

H. Eugene Goodwin, director of the university's School of Journalism, told the students of the "limitless opportunities" in journalism, and the journalist's opportunity to meet and know leaders in all fields- judges and scientists, politicians and doctors, policemen and socialites.

With a theme "Journalism: What's In It For You," Goodwin reported on a survey of 85 of the largest journalism schools throughout the U.S. last year which revealed that all but five had more job offers than graduates.

Most job offers, he continued, are running from $60 to $100 a week for starting journalists. Goodwin explained that journalism ranks behind some other professions in starting pay, but that there are regular salary increases with experience.

"Public Relations and the School Newspaper" was the theme for John D. Vairo, instructor in public relations and newspaper management at the campus.
