USGA President Speaks to PACC

Woven throughout a speech delivered by Benjamin Novak to the Press Association of Commonwealth Campuses in September, at which Hazleton was represented, was the theme of appearance versus reality. Mr. Novak, President of the University Park Undergraduate Government, expressed his views on what the Student Government Association really is and stands for and how the campus newspapers affect SGA's image.

"What does Student Government do?" asked Novak. He believes that unfair criticism is often thrust upon its members before a detailed examination is made. Further, he said that the important aspect to be brought to attention is groundwork, not just the grand successes or dire failures of such an organization. SGA could not be expected to right every wrong on campus and campus newspapers should not imply such.

Novak compares SGA to the United Nations in that both have no real power; both are not governments. Both SGA and the UN are heterogeneous and permeated in many instances with petty motivations and ambitions.

Novak stressed "behind the scenes" work. As in newspaper work, in SGA much goes on that is never brought to the foreground. Many persons work hard laying the groundwork or working out details of various projects. Most of these persons never receive due credit for their earnest efforts.

With all these little efforts in mind, Novak related the fact that a newspaper can block SGA's far-reaching strivings. A newspaper "can make us look like blundering idiots or true successes," he said, "and what SGA runs into in apathy can be traced to newspaper influence." This is why he believes a newspaper must be objective. It has the obligation to meet the need of its readers in saying "what has to be said or ought to be said," he explains. By taking into view the total effect of things, one is in a better position for a truly objective look at things.

As a final consideration, Novak suggested that a campus newspaper see SGA as a metropolitan newspaper might see the United States and consequently treat it in like manner. A newspaper might print a story on the Bobby Baker case, but this would not mean that its love for its country was any less.

tables in the SUB. Various committees have been formed to see that this ruling will be enforced.
