

RANT ORGANIZES

Announcement was made October 7 by the editor of RANT that the Highacres Campus literary magazine will be published for distribution prior to final week of Fall term. RANT will also be published Winter and Spring terms.

Joanne Volosky, editor-in-chief, set the publication dates and announced the RANT staff for the 1969-1970 scholastic year as follows: Associate Editor, Tom Caccese Fine Arts Editor, Nick Dembrosky; Prose Editor, Paul Demko; and Barry Veet, Business Manager.

Freshmen on the staff include: Jerry Bright, Ed. Roscioli, Kevin McCann, Rich Dymond, Jon Robertson, Debbie Zehner, Linda Skypaula, Mary Lynn Broski, Mimi Fuehrer, Diane Hunt, and Nancy Kent.

Contributions in the form of artwork, cartoons, poetry, and short stories will be accepted only if signed by the contributing student. Upon written request, a student's name will be withheld from beneath the article, but all contributors will be listed on the credit page of the magazine.

war. Students and faculty expressed their opinions on this highly controversial issue. Dr. Aurand kicked off the discussion with a general review of the present ideas concerning national involvement in the war. The T.G.I.F. was conducted in a fashion allowing all present to voice his particular stand.

As will be the case when dealing with a many-faceted and highly complex situation, the informal talk became heated at certain points. Although no concrete conclusions were drawn or any earth shaking solutions came upon, the T.G.I.F. must be deemed a success by its very nature alone. Students and faculty members used their free periods to contribute their views and showed genuine concern over this national dilemma. Such wholehearted response is admirable to say the least, in this increasingly apathetic society.

New 2-Year Programs Offered

University Park, Pa., June — A new two-year degree program emphasizing vocational training in journalism, radio broadcasting and advertising has been approved by the Board of Trustees of The Pennsylvania State University.

The first journalism classes are to be offered this year at the Delaware and Shenango Valley Campuses at Chester and Sharon.

A pilot class in broadcasting was conducted this year at the Wilkes-Barre Campus and a second freshman class will be enrolled this Fall.

The advertising program is to be launched in the Fall of 1971 at an as yet undesignated site.

The three programs previously had been approved by the Trustees as options in the University's Letters Arts and Sciences associate degree program.

The Trustees, however, decided to consolidate them into a separate two-year program in Mass Communications in order to concentrate on the vocational training aspect of the three professions.

It was felt a distinct Mass Communications major would more effectively provide the necessary academic emphasis rather than continuing the programs as options under the general, non-vocational Letters, Arts and Sciences.

The Mass Communications curriculum was designed by the University's School of Journalism and Department of Speech in response to the growing remand for more small town reporters, broadcasters and advertising personnel.

"The news departments and advertising staffs of the smaller or medium-sized dailies and stations are hurting for trained personnel," explained H. Eugene Goodwin, head of the Penn State journalism school.

"There just aren't enough qualified people to go around after the metropolitan media, the wire services, even government, industry and public relations firms, complete their recruiting," he continued.

"We expect this new two-year program, by focusing on the vocational skills of the business, can do much to solve one of journalism's most critical manpower needs."

IN AND AROUND

Dean McCallus, Joyce Rupp, and Don Jacoby attended a steering committee meeting at the Schuylkill campus. The meeting was held to evaluate the Penn State Associate Degree Program.

Highacres Happenings, a column in the Hazleton Standard Speaker has been revitalized. Joanne Volosky will be the new newspaper correspondent.

The Highacres Collegian would like to announce that Mrs. Ferry, Librarian, and Mr. Campbell, instructor in Philosophy, have been named as advisors to the Collegian. We truly appreciate their support in our attempts to publish a responsible and informative newspaper.

On behalf of the student body, the Highacres Collegian would like to welcome all the new members of our faculty. On behalf of the staff of the Collegian, we ask the support and cooperation of the faculty, and we welcome all evaluations and criticisms.
