

HIGHACRES PERSONALITIES

What sort of a person would say, "Strangely enough, I was born in the same room that my mother was in!" Our model of innocence, John Corkill, hails from Jim Thorpe and is a sophomore. He is presently in the college of secondary education and is majoring in English. In connection with the campus, John holds the position of Chairman for the Customs Board and the Arts and Cultures Committee.

John Corkill

He has a wide range of interests which include cars, music, and sports. When it comes to sports, John can be regularly seen playing ping-pong or putting rocks in Mr. Bobby's volleyball bag. In the field of music, he plays a folk guitar. "... because I do not have enough money to buy a classical guitar." He also collects records which include his favorites; Donovan and Peter, Paul and Mary.

While John's dislikes are insincerity and hurting people, his views about himself are that he talks too much and is a compulsive liar. His outlook on life is, "No matter how tough the steak is, you can always stick a fork in a cup of coffee."

Politically, John would support ex-senator Wayne Morse in the 1972 presidential campaign. "... he understands America's foreign policy mistakes, also, he does not seem as commercial as the other senators."

Besides wanting to be an English teacher. "... because I do not want to get stuck working in the zinc company. John's main goal in life is, "To become a Morman and have several wives."

Stuart Erwin, a native of Glasgow, Scotland, is the new French instructor at the Highacre's Campus. He came to the U.S. at the age of three and now resides in Brooklyn, N.Y. Mr. Erwin received his A. B. from Grove City College, Pa., and his Masters from Penn State.

A student of the French Language for almost thirteen years, Mr. Erwin feels that, "The study of a language allows a person to develop his ability to reason." In other words, language is logic. "In all the time that he has studied French," he recalls, "I have never had a dream in French but I have dreamt about the French." (Is Bridget Bardot a favorite subject?)

Mr. Erwin favors the closeness

Betsy Ross all over again? Not really—just an enthusiastic group of girls preparing the All-University Day banner. This banner, which was in accordance with the theme set by the Keystone Society, "Pennsylvania: Birthplace of a Nation," represented the Hazleton Campus at All-University Day.

SPECIAL PROGRAM

UNIVERSITY PARK Pa., Oct. 29—Members of the Black academic community at The Pennsylvania State University held a special halftime program at the State-Boston College football game.

Culminating more than a month of discussion and planning, the program is the outgrowth of a series of meetings between members of the Black Student Union and unaffiliated students and Ernest B. McCoy, dean of the College of Health and Physical Education.

A block of 140 seats has been reserved for participants in the program.

"We are making time available to members of the Black academic community for a statement of goals and purposes," Dean McCoy said. "We live in a time when it is especially important to know the perspectives and viewpoints of minority groups whose members seek full participation in American society but too often have been denied it."

of Highacre's students with the faculty, yet he thinks they should be more responsive in class. One disadvantage of the campus which he sees as unavoidable is, "... that the students have made little outside contact beyond the friendships of highschool classmates."

Of his outlook on life, Mr. Erwin says, "I am basically content with my world but would like to expand my field of interest's." He has an extra interest in Contemporary Literature and has always wanted to learn how to ski.

Mr. Erwin plans to travel through Europe next summer. A considerable part of his vacation will be spent, obviously, in France.
