

HIGHACRES COLLEGIAN

GAS SHORTAGE POSES NO THREAT TO HIGHACRES SAY DAVID AND CERULA

By Paul Sullivan

There is no need for alarm presently or in the foreseeable future that Highacres will close its doors and stop functioning as an educational institution, according to William David, Campus Director, and Paul Cerula, Business Manager.

"The natural gas shortage that has affected the nation, has not curtailed any campus activities," said Cerula on February 3, "and I see no such curtailments as of today." Cerula said that all the buildings on campus are powered by oil or by a sophisticated steam-heating system, which is piped to the campuses buildings. "Right now, P.P. and L. (Pennsylvania Power and Light) is selling electricity to certain areas of Pennsylvania because of the over abundance of energy its facilities have." Therefore, if the natural gas shortage continues to be a national problem, the facilities powered by oil and electricity on the local, state,

Continued on page 11

DAVID REVEALS CAUSES FOR GYM DELAYS

by Elliot Grossman

Hassles between the contractor, sub-contractor, and the architect, and legal problems led to a substantial delay in the opening, occupancy, and use of the Highacres Physical Education Building, said William David, Campus Director.

The original official entry date of the University into the Physical Education Building was scheduled for June 10, 1976 but complete occupancy did not come until January, 1977. Even with complete occupancy of the building, the University still does not have complete use of it.

"Towards late summer (1976) everyone was fighting," said David in October of 1976. The heating sub-contractor blamed the delay on the electrical

Continued on page 11

Highacres was filled with sights similar to this scene last week. This picture shows a twelve-foot icicle hanging from the Main Building. Relief from the weather conditions finally came late last week as the thermometer hit 50 degrees. (Photo by David Kraft)

inside the collegian

Collegian Personality . . .	p.10
Editorials	p.2
From the desk of the S.G.A. President	p.3
Letter to the Editor	p. 4&5
Sports	p.8