Frosh Place
Emphasis On Careers

Highacres freshman tend to prefer small families, placing an emphasis on career achievement over financial reward.

So indicates the results of a national attitude survey conducted by the American Council on Education and the University of California at Los Angeles. The survey was administered to 315 first year students at Highacres as part of a University-wide survey.

The two most important goals for men were becoming an authority in their field and being well-off financially. However, these goals were ranked fifth and seventh, respectively, by women. The first choice of women, helping others in difficulty, ranked fifth among men.

A large percentage of men and women felt it important to raise a family and develop a philosophy of life. Women placed a philosophy third and family fourth, whereas men's responses were reversed, placing family third and philosophy fourth. Both men and women placed obtaining recognition from their colleagues in fifth position.

Tall, dark, and not-so-handsome would be one way to describe what was seen by several Highacres students on the evening of April 13 near the campus tennis courts.

"We were coming from the fireline, past the gym and noticed this really foul smell. About half-way down the service road we heard alot of noise behind us, like something was running through the woods. When we turned around, it was just sorta' there standing by the gate across the road," recalled one of the students.

"I would say it was about eight or nine feet tall and really black," said another witness. After a couple of seconds it ran into the woods to the left of the gate, taking huge strides. We didn't bother chasing it because we weren't exactly sure what it was," the student added.

"There isn't really any-way to be sure what we saw was a bigfoot, but I know it was no shadow," another witness commented.

A bigfoot has been described as half man and half ape by many witnesses in North America. The adult creatures supposedly ranges in size from nin to twelve feet and is completely covered with thick, black hair. These elusive creatures have reportedly been sighted in nearly every state of the nation at one time or another. The most frequent reports of
