

SGA prompts return of course selectors

A few weeks before the end of the semester, each Penn State student must enroll and choose classes for the upcoming semester. To benefit the students, Penn State Hazleton's Student Government Association (SGA) played a more than significant role in making course selectors available to the students for the fall 1991 semester.

The course selectors describe the classes and their requirements. They also inform the students as to who is teaching each class. "The students can make their schedule according to how much each class requires of them. They have an idea of how much work will be expected of them, including the number of tests and papers that will be due. This will enable them to watch the workload," said SGA president Brian Suwalski.

Last year, the selectors were distributed in the spring for the fall 1990 semester, but because of lack of funding they were not available for the spring 1991 semester. Funding for the course selectors had come from the administration. "Student Government decided that it was a project that had to be done for the students, and we are picking up the cost," said Suwalski.

To make the course descriptors possible, Mrs. Judy O'Donnell and the Academic Advising Center computes the information needed for the booklet. A copy is then sent to SGA which in turn takes it to International Printing to be copied.

The most difficult part of the project is compiling the information. Printing copies for the students only takes a few days. "They came a few days after registration started, but we got them out as soon as possible," Suwalski said.

Suwalski continued, "We decided that SGA should take care of everything. It makes things a lot easier... Student Government is here for the purpose of helping the students."

"It's going to be a bi-annual thing for the students. The sophomores are glad to see that the selectors are back because they know how helpful they were in the past. The freshmen appreciate them a little more because they didn't have them last semester to schedule their classes for spring. Now that they are available the students see that scheduling is a little easier," finished Suwalski.

When asked if other campuses have selectors as well, Suwalski answered, "From what we understand, U-park is trying to start it. York Campus and a few others have them..."

One student picking up a selector said, "Hopefully this will become a tradition here... they really give great descriptions that help a lot."

"Untitled"

by Kimberleigh Rosenberg

I thought love was so real the most tangible emotion available

but yet

it's so vague

or not quite possible

If there's a measurement of time

known or spent together

I've achieved it

If there's a period of confusion

anger or remorse

I've experienced it

If there's a time of joy

or feelings so intense

I have felt it

I cannot find a definition for what I feel for you

but yet

I have now found

it's too late to stop too strong to deny

too complex to understand

If there's a way to assure that what I feel is right

I'll know it

If there's a way to give myself to you

I won't be hesitant

If I see the chance to be yours forever

I'll take it