THE COLLEGIAN STAFF SALUTES ADVISER ART SEIBEL

ART SEIBEL didn't know this was being written. And the risk of getting his picture from the files — watched over by Seibel — was great. But since this is the swan song edition of this year's Collegian, the staff feels that Art Seibel deserves a salute from his paper.

The Public Relations Office has been the center of everything this year, and usually Mr. Seibel was in the center of the office. He's had everything in that office from close order drill by Sgt. Vasko's reserves to an old fashioned GI bull session. But still the public has been welcome. It's a public relations office, you know.

ART SEIBEL

This man has never asked any of his associates to do anything he would never do himself. That factor has done much for close harmony in his department. When it came to new angles for publicity, Seibel's well of ideas never went dry and he still has many more for next year. All indications point to a bigger job at HUC for Art Seibel, since more people must be told about the facilities at the college. And more important still, in that goal of a larger educational plant, public relations will play a very definite part. And there will be found Art Seibel.

The man almost saw this editorial. He just came back for a dictionary he forgot to take to class!

Year O' Firsts

This year has been a year of "firsts" at the Hazleton Undergraduate Center with many pioneer programs being presented for the benefit of the public and the student body. Monday night the first annual Language Festival was staged at the YWCA. The crowd was made up primarily of students but the start was good and the lessons learned will be valuable next year. Above all, let's have one next year!

Last month the college threw open its doors for the first time to show the public of the Hazleton area just what goes on within the walls of a junior college. This was another pioneer project which can be developed to a great degree. People must be told constantly about education. This has been proved many, many times. But the cause is a noble one and the years ahead offer a challenge to future faculties.

And now, on June 5, this institution will hold its first honors convocation. The people of this section will be able to see the rewards of work and perserverance received by students deserving of them. Without aping the graduation which will be experienced by each student at the end of eight semesters, the college will recognize those who have worked hard for the first part of their advanced education.

This has been a great year and it can only serve to raise the goals of the future.
