Football on the Rocks

Viewpoint

Merkel Tells It Like . . .

by Tom Osiecki

Merkel slid down the muddy hill with his eyes closed.

He had just spent the night downing cans of Colt 45 with the boys and wondered if it were possible to play flag football with his eyes closed.

The field was cold and muddy at 8 a.m. on a Monday morning and the Phys. Ed. instructor stood yelling orders in his ear.

"Now everybody start picking up rocks," said the Phys. Ed. teacher. (Phys. Ed. teachers yell a lot.)

"What?" yelled Merkel with his eyes closed.

"I said pick up the rocks you," yelled the Phys. Ed. teacher who knew Merkel's name was Merkel but didn't want to show favoritism.

"Why?" asked Merkel.

"'Cause you can't play flag football with rocks on the field," said the Phys. Ed. teacher. (Phys. Ed. teachers have a lot of common sense.)

PICKED UP ROCKS

This all made no sense to Merkel, but little did at 8 a.m. so Merkel started picking up rocks and carrying them into the woods where he would drop them and curse.

Merkel figured that 30 college students standing in a corn field carrying rocks with their eyes closed and cursing was a pretty funny sight and said this to the guy carrying rocks next to him.

The guy carrying rocks next to Merkel didn't think it was funny and dropped the rocks on Merkel's feet. He thought this was very funny.

The next few days were spent carrying hay, digging holes and doing general labor in the corn field for no pay. When the students started telling the Phys. Ed. teacher that construction workers make $5.05 an hour for doing the same things, the teacher decided to let them play football. (Phys. Ed. teachers are very diplomatic.)

"Alright, let's name the teams," shouted the Phys. Ed. teacher.

The class yelled back every obscenity they knew.

"No, no yea gotta keep it clean," yelled the Phys. Ed. teacher. (Phys. Ed. teachers yell a lot.)

MERKEL PLAYS

Merkel was picked for the team called Scum, which was to play the team called Body Odor. (College students have gutter minds.)

In flag football each player wears a pair of plastic flags around his waist which, when pulled off, signifies a tackle. This saves a lot of broken bones.

Merkel's team faced the sun and had the side of the field which sloped upward. (Corn fields make lousy football fields.)

Merkel caught the football and ran down the field with his eyes closed. He was tackled.

"I said you can't tackle," yelled the Phys. Ed. teacher.

"I forgot," answered the guy called Butch.

THE AFTERMATH

Phys. Ed. teachers always laugh when guys with names like Butch or Nails say something.

After six tackles, three collisions, a trip, and a bite on the nose, Merkel's day on the field was over. He walked off the corn field into the hot, crowded building ready to begin his day of classes.

Since there are no showers Merkel never worried about being late for class. There always seemed to be plenty of room made for him after he sat down.

Gourmet's Opinion

Today's Special: Chili 'n Chaos

by Debra Young

The atmosphere is a mixture of mass hysteria, ping-pong clashes and loud outbursts which creates an atmosphere which encourages indigestion.

In the neighborhood of Lima, there are not many restaurants nearby.

But, there is one restaurant that you should avoid. Even its name — the Delaware County Campus Lounge — is not too swank.

FLOOR LITTERED

Paper littered on the tile floor and salt mixed with ashes on the uncovered table tops add to the flavor of the decor of this restaurant.

But most important are the tasty treats that you can buy in this outstanding restaurant. Most of the time the food is so fresh that one finds it hard to get it out of his mouth and down his throat.

CHEATED

Sometimes you get cheated when the machines keeps $.50 for a $.45 ham sandwich.

The kitchen is another outstanding feature of this fine eating place. There are two microwave ovens but only one is in working order.

Hostess Ida Mae Van Horn works as a machine filler, table cleaner and part-time compliant listener. She deserves a prize — luncheon at the restaurant of her choice.

The restaurant is not too well known in the community and by the consensus, it should stay that way.
