

Boo-It's Halloween

crime, just fifteen years later, he escapes and plans to create havoc the following night which is Halloween.

On Halloween morning, while hiding out in the house where the original murder of his sister took place, the psychopath spots a pretty, young girl named Laurie (Jaimie Lee Curtis) walking down the street. All that day, Laurie sees the psychopath staring at her from afar; in school, outside school, and through her bedroom window.

Laurie thinks she is seeing things and she doesn't even think of calling the police.

How stupid can one person get? The psychopath also sees two of Laurie's friends (P.J. Soles and Nancy Loomis) that day. The psychopath hears the girls talking about the partying ventures that they have planned for that night. He follows the girls to a house. You can picture the craziness from there.

The picture was shot on only a 300,000 dollar budget (most of it going to the film's only name star, Donald Pleasance)

Donald Pleasance turned in a fine performance as the psychopath's shrink. As for the director, Richard Carpenter, better luck next time out!

SHAKESPEARE ON T.V.

On Wednesday, February 14, the first of 37 Shakespearian plays, "Julius Caesar," was aired by the Public Broadcasting Service (PBS) - Channel 12. PBS will air all of Shakespeare's plays during the next six years.
