University Policy

Odd/Even

The Lion's Eye has learned that University officials had contemplated initiating the following policy during Summer Term 1979.

MEMORANDUM TO: All Departments
SUBJECT: Odd/Even Restroom use
DATE: Summer, 1979

Effective immediately, those employees who have social security numbers ending with even numbers will be allowed to use the restrooms on even days. Those with social security numbers ending with odd numbers will use the restrooms on odd-numbered days. The 31st of any month is a free day and anyone will be allowed to use the restrooms.

Visitors, tourists, heavy beer drinkers, and those with bladder or medical problems may apply to the Personnel Department for a "P" sticker which will exempt them from procedures.

Finally, please note that employees must be able to prove that they have a half a tank to be allowed to use the facilities.

Students Can't Vote For Trustees

WASHINGTON -- Students at Pennsylvania State University have failed to win the right to vote for college trustees.

Without comment, the Supreme Court refused last week to hear the students' claim that they have a constitutional right to elect 21 of Penn State's 32 trustees. Those 21 are now elected by the Penn State Alumni Association and members of the county agricultural societies in the state.

The refusal leaves intact the November dismissal of the students' suit by a three-judge Court of Appeals panel in Philadelphia.

The panel rejected the argument of the students that a right to vote for state university trustees is as fundamental as a right to vote for government officials.

"At most," the three judges wrote, "the board (of trustees) has the authority to approve a budget and set a level of tuition. And even in the setting of tuition, they do not have a free hand."

Therefore, the judges said they needed only to find a "rational basis" for allowing nine trustees to be selected by the alumni association and 12 trustees by members of the agricultural societies.

The alumni association, they said, has been active at Penn State for more than 100 years, participating significantly in campus activities and contributing millions of dollars in gifts to the university.

And, the judges wrote, the university's historic commitment to agricultural and industrial goals makes it reasonable to give members of agricultural and industrial societies a privileged voice in operating the school.

Penn State, created in 1855, was originally known as the Farmers' High School of Pennsylvania, and its purpose was "the proper education of a farmer."

Alan B. Morrison and Diane B. Cohn of Washington, lawyers for the students, contend that the exclusion of students from the election process was imposed by the trustees themselves, not by the State Legislature, and could not be justified at a modern university that had changed so drastically over the years.

"Despite the persuasive influence that the trustees have over the lives of the students of Penn State, the selection of the 21 trustees... is done entirely without participation by the students," Morrison and Ms. Cohn told the Supreme Court in a brief.

"It is this denial of equality in the right to vote for university trustees that is at issue in this case."

Four students, all of whom have been graduated, filed the suit in 1977. They did not challenge the five seats on the board of trustees that are held by the university president, the governor and three members of the governor's cabinet. Nor did they contest six seats filled by the governor, with the consent of the Senate.
