Beaver Stadium Grass is Special

(reprinted by permission from the Daily Collegian, University Park)

The football game is over. The fans have gone home to celebrate victory or talk about the ifs, ands and buts of defeat. The athletes have left to nurse their aches and pains, leaving in their wake a scarred and ravaged victim - the field.

While thousands of Americans view this annual fall ritual, only a handful ever notice the field, except, of course, the goallines and yardlines that mark the progress of their favorite team. And maybe, once in a while, a fan will comment on the color or condition of the field.

But what of the field itself? What kind of surface is it and does the texture of the field make a difference?

If you answered who cares, grass and no way, respectively, to the questions above, think again.

First, if there wasn't a football field, where would the game be played? On a parking lot?

Second, while the field in Beaver Stadium is made of grass, the grass is a little different than the ordinary front yard variety. Would you let 22 men in cleats run all over your front lawn for two hours and expect it to look the same?

When they remodeled Beaver Stadium in 1978 to seat 76,000 fans, the field was resodded. The old turf was poa annua, a weed-like grass with a shallow root system. Now the field is a mixture of three bluegrasses - touchdown, majestic and adelphia.

The new surface has a deep root system and won't pull up as easily as poa annua, said Bob Hudzik, the man in charge of maintaining the field.

"Touchdown is much more vigorous," Hudzik said. "It is more disease and wear resistant."

Because the new grass is sturdier, the upkeep is minimal. Hudzik said the field is only fertilized, watered and overseeded. After a game, the divots are replaced and the field is set for another week.

While Hudzik could give no estimate of the cost of the new field, one sod dealer said that $12,000 is a conservative estimate for sodding a field measuring 62,000 square feet from endzone to endzone.

Finally, while the texture of the field doesn't make a difference to the spectator, it does make a difference to the athlete. That 1 1/4 inches of grass is the only thing between him and the rough dirt. Although astro-turf is used in almost all professional stadiums, some football players have said that they prefer real grass, because it is softer than astro-turf and not as slick when it's wet.

Although the color of the field is not really relevant to its purpose, it is interesting to note how the different colors are achieved. In Beaver Stadium, the field appears to alternate between light and dark green every five yards. The affect is achieved by cutting the grass in different directions, thus causing the blades to lay differently. The endzones and yardlines are painted on with blue or white exterior latex paint. Hudzik said the paint will not damage the grass.

The Nittany Lions outmaneuvered Army, 24-3, before 77,157 fans at Beaver Stadium in University Park October 13.

The Lions' senior fullback Matt Suhey marched for 225 yards on 23 carries - including a 61-yard touchdown run in the fourth quarter. His' was the fourth best rushing day in Penn State's history.

...Trounce Syracuse

The Lions, led by junior quarterback Darryl Tate, stomped the Syracuse Orangemen 35-7 last Saturday at Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, New Jersey.

Tate connected for a career high 14 of 18 passes, throwing for 199 yards and three touchdowns. State scored touchdowns on four of its first six possessions to build a 28-0 halftime lead. The Lions marched 82 yards for a touchdown in the game's opening series.

The key matchup of the two Eastern rivals was an important game for Syracuse (4-2), after a stunning 49-17 loss to Temple October 13. Penn State has won the last nine games in its series with Syracuse - which started in 1922 - and now posts a 31-21-5 lead.
