

Dear Roseanna

Dear Roseanna,

I have a crush on this cute guy in my English class. The problem is that he sits on the other side of the room, and doesn't seem to notice me. How can I attract his attention?

Situation Hopeless

Dear Hopeless,

Have you thought of approaching him casually in the cafeteria or in the student lounge? You might be able to talk to him more freely outside of the classroom scene. If for some reason this suggestion would not work for you, there's always the old "oops, I seem to have dropped all my books squarely in front of you" ruse, which I use from time to time. Another suggestion would be to ask him for a change for a dollar. It works every time.

Roseanna

Dear Roseanna,

My problem is that I read too slowly. I can hardly keep up with the readings in my English 20 class. I want to get help from one of the cute girls in my class, but how can I get a girl to help me?

Needs Evelyn Wood

Dear Needie,

Wait until one of them drops her books squarely at your feet, or asks for change for a buck. You take it from there.

Roseanna

Dear Roseanna,

I've been wondering lately whether it is really worthwhile to go to college. I study so much, hand in all of my assignments on time, yet my grades aren't as good as they could be. I have been wondering what things would be like if I dropped out. Any clues?

Undecided

Dear Undecided,

If you really want to find out, go to an unemployment agency. You could probably get a good idea from standing in the unemployment line. Everybody gets discouraged once in a while in college. If you are having problems in some of your classes, try going to the Library Learning Center tutorial services. It is open every school day and offers help in English and math.

Roseanna

Dear Roseanna,

I am like addicted to Bob and Doug MacKenzie humor, eh? I play their records day and night, and like I am starting to talk like them. Like, this problem's a beauty, eh? Got any advice?

Great White North

Dear Great White,

Yeah . . . take off!
