'The Philadelphia Area Weather Book,' written by Glenn 'Hurricane' Schwartz and John Nese, is on sale now, and its authors will be on campus to discuss it.

Talk about the weather, with pros

Many students talk about the weather, but only Penn State Delco has the opportunity to do something about it.

Starting at 7 p.m. Sept. 26, like gathering clouds on the horizon, Delco is in for a magnificent presentation of weather in Room 103 of the Classroom building.

Penn State's own pseudo-celebrities and meteorologists, Dr. Jon Nese of the Franklin Institute and Glen "Hurricane" Schwartz of NBC-10, will be dropping in for a picture presentation about the Philadelphia region's weather history.

The presentation itself is based on a recently released (June 21, 2002) book the two collaborated on: "The Philadelphia Weather Book; including Delaware, the Poconos, and the Jersey Shore." ($39.50).

There is a display in our bookstore and a book signing by the two weather warriors after their presentation.

"Philadelphia Area Weather Book' offers a little-known history of the region's pivotal role in the development of weather science that goes back to colonial times..." said a Temple University Web site.

The presentation from the book will feature the history of weather, covering some of its 150 illustrations; including photographs, maps, and some of the most bizarre and intense images of natural weather phenomenon the Philadelphia region has ever suffered through.

"You thought we had a bad season this past year ... wait until you see a photo of the Schuylkill River when it was so low you could almost walk across it!" said an excited Dr. Laura Guertin, a professor of earth and mineral science at Delco's campus.

Guertin did not wish to give away all the information about the book and/or the lecture.

"It is fascinating to review the significant weather events of Philadelphia's past, and to discuss what is to come in the future," said Guertin.

Catch Penn State spirit at All U Day

All University Day, more commonly known as All "U" Day, is back.

This is a huge event at which students from all Penn State campuses will travel up to Beaver Stadium for a football game. This year's game will take place Saturday, Sept. 28, against Iowa.

"The place is full and the town will be jammed," said Diane Shorter of the Student Life Department.

During halftime, students will venture out onto the field, and represent their campus with flags and banners.

"[There is] a lot of school spirit," Shorter said.

Tickets will be on sale to students for $19 each, and to all faculty, staff, and non-PSU students for $42 each.

"University Park has only allowed [Penn State Delco] 27 student tickets for this year," Shorter said. "The number is based on the number of tickets sold last year. If the campus does sell more than the original amount, there will be a waiting list for additional tickets, but not a guarantee."

"Any extra tickets from other campuses," Shorter said, "will be redistributed here on a first-come, first-served basis."

If you plan on attending the event, remember to bring your school ID.

"Security will be much higher [due to the events that occurred Sept. 11]," officials said.

The tickets went on sale the week of Sept. 9, but for additional information on how to get tickets contact Diane Shorter at (610) 892-1279 or dds4@psu.edu.
