Creepy crawlers keeping you up at night?

Dr. Love
(Gary Dungan)

Mr. Hate
(Shawn Manderson)

Question: Tell me why I am ragged about having a relationship with a much older person, when I'm well over the age of consent?

—Risky Business.

Doc Love: My friend, I most assuredly assure you that most of your "raggers" would not upset you on purpose - otherwise, why would they care enough to approach you about it? Thusly it is in this fashion that I too approach you. It has been said that love knows no boundaries. But a balanced relationship requires growing boundaries, which are measured in the love you two have for one another.

Mr. Hate: Well there, you have to understand that people have their own views and opinions about dating when it comes to situations like this. Society has norms and sometimes people let those norms affect them and then they become judgmental of others, such as you.

Question: I'm having these nightmares. I'm lying in my bed and these huge scary bugs creep all over me. I can't get away and I'm grossed out. They're always maggots, roaches, and spiders. I'm tired and just want a goodnight's sleep.

—Jeepers Creepers

Doc Love: So, ma cherie, you've got something bugging you. Sometimes dreams are warning signs of an anxiety in life; here you've manifested them into bugs. The most important thing to do is identify your concerning issue. Half way towards winning any battle is to know where the enemy is. For sleep, fight fire with fire: before bed, imagine bigger appealing insects to counteract and defend you from your repulsive ones.

Mr. Hate: Geez, what are we psychologists? You need to stop eating so late at night before you go to bed, that can attribute to your "creepy crawly dreams." Plus maybe if you took a shower then subconsciously you would not be thinking that you are dirty, hence thinking about the bugs and roaches or whatever crawls all over you.

"Just Married"

Starring Brittany Murphy and Ashton Kutcher, this film is about two newlyweds of different socio-economic backgrounds and follows their journey through the "honeymoon from hell."

Kutcher plays Tom Leezak, a part-time radio host, who meets Sarah McNerney (Murphy), and the two fall hopelessly in love and marry, against the family's wishes. The film begins after the couple has returned from their honeymoon, and it continues into a circular plot which would be effective, had the movie contained substance.

Despite the crude humor and tone of the movie, the characters kiss and make up and live happily ever after, much like a romantic comedy. Aww, how cute — how amazingly predictable is more like it.

If you eliminate the sexual references and harsh language, this movie would be ideal and appropriate for the average 10-year-old. There's an abundance of slapstick comedy that isn't remotely funny to a mature audience, and there are plenty of silly sexual connotations that will make you roll your eyes. A few plot situations are humorous, but the bad dialogue and cheesy sentiment moments ruin it all.

In this movie, comedy and romance do not mix. They create an unrealistic plot that makes you wish you had never wasted $7 for a movie ticket.

On a positive note, the film does portray the theme that two people can overcome their differences and work things out. If you absolutely must see this film, wait until it comes out on video and split the cost with a friend.

"Freedom's Slave" At Fennario's

When stepping into Fennario's, a coffee shop on Church Street a little off of Route 3 in West Chester, the muted sounds from above tend to surround you. Purchasing some coffee or a can of coke gives you access to anything in the coffee shop. Across from the sales counter, and up a couple flights of stairs, you'll find a crowded room, and some of the best of the local bands around.

Freedom's Slave had the stage this night. Anthony Mariano was assaulting the extremely overpacked room with some high-power guitar riffs. Matt Barlow was belting out the vocals, making you think of Metallica's lead singer, James Hetfield. Sean Barrett on the bass, and Tristan Smith, playing drums, kept a low profile through almost the entire show.

Watching the crowd, one finds mixed reactions to the heavy tunes that fill the room. The reactions ranged from disgusted to frenzied.

One of those not so enthused by the concert, a fellow student at Penn State Delco, Phil Freda, said, "Well, it's good to see people trying to make music.....even if they can't." Indeed, it was a sentiment shared by more than a few of the room's occupants.

On the other hand, this writer enjoyed himself quite thoroughly with the abusive tunes. Finding myself in the front row, shoulder to shoulder with 15 or 20 other people, the least I can say is it was intense.

Freedom's Slave already has two albums out. The first, "Blue Things Discourage Defecation" and the newer, "Are You Fantastical?"

IT'S IN THE STARS

By JENNIFER RUFO

VIRGO: Playing games this month may lead you to a clear path in the chaos that is your life. Helping others along the way also helps you. If you fall down, get back up.

CAPRICORN: Being out of touch with old friends makes you feel lonely. Make the effort to contact them, even if they don't have time for you. A friend in need is a friend indeed.

TAURUS: Your levelheaded way of thinking is much needed. Others will come to you for advice or to vent. Be prepared to listen with an open-mind.

LIBRA: Love is what solves your problems this month. A romantic date or hanging out with friends helps relieve stress. Don't be afraid to venture into the unknown.

AQUARIUS: You finally feel understood this month by a select group of people. Treat them the way you would want to be treated. Now is not the time for low spirits.

GEMINI: Look into the eyes of an animal and you will see the truth you seek. Things are not what they seem, so proceed with caution. Someone has a crush on you.

SCORPIO: Take time out for what you need the most, a good night's sleep. You'll feel a lot better in the morning. Take a morning walk instead of a cup of coffee.

PISCES: Tough times are behind you so take advantage of what life has to offer. Work is also more tolerable for you, but beware of romantic relationships in the workplace.

CANCER: Food for thought is what you need this month. Get as much of those candy conversation hearts you can find to use throughout the year. Someone will listen.

SAGITTARIUS: Giving to charities will help you feel better as a person. There are many opportunities around you. Those who give must receive, so expect a surprise.

ARIES: Pay attention to your dreams. They will reveal some secrets about the inner depths of your soul. Bundle up with someone you love and have fun outside.

LEO: You need to understand when to keep your mouth closed and your eyes open. Your narrow escapes are ending. Relax and let your natural personality shine through.
