The Spring Speaker Series

By Kyrstin Camp - Lion's Eye Staff Writer - ksc5136@psu.edu

The Spring Speaker Series is a program that has been taking place at Penn State Brandywine. According to assistant professor of history, Julie Gallagher, the program is an attempt to "educate students and the community on the importance and possibilities surrounding energy usage and resource sustainability." Professor Gallagher is also a member of the committee that runs the Speaker Series. On January 28th, Lisa Yerges, the Director of Business Services for Penn State Brandywine, spoke to the students about becoming more resource efficient. She cited current campus efforts to use resources wisely, and encouraged students and staff to do the same. Ms. Yerges also encouraged the 60 - 75 students in attendance to join the Environmental Club at Penn State Brandywine.

Next up was the main speaker, Erik Foley. Mr. Foley is the director of Penn State's new Campus Sustainability Office. His talk was titled "Riding the Green Wave: A Fresh Look at Sustainable Living." Foley founded and directed the award winning Renewable Energy Center at Saint Francis University. This program continues to feature several state-wide projects in community based renewable energy development. A native of Montana, Foley has traveled extensively from the Alaskan bush, to Paraguay, back stateside to Seattle, and now rural Pennsylvania. In addition to his fourteen years of experience, Foley has earned a M.B.A. as well as degrees in sociology and environmental studies. He has also served on the America Council on Renewable Energy's Communications Committee.

Two more exciting speakers are coming to Penn State Brandywine. On Tuesday February 23rd, Yvette Brown from Clean Markets will be exploring new technologies and energy usage. Her talk will cover the growth of these new technologies and the potential for usage in the United States. Yvette Brown has more than 20 years of experience across a variety of disciplines in the energy industry, ranging from marketing and sales to capacity planning and distribution. As executive vice president of Clean Markets, she helps corporate, university, and government clients to optimize performance and implement innovations within the energy industry, and also assists in developing effective outreach programs that increase the market penetration of clean technologies. On Wednesday April 7th, Gary Saulson from PNC Bank, will speak to the campus about green buildings. PNC, which is a leader in "green" initiatives, has the largest number of green certified buildings in the world.

Students, faculty and staff are encouraged on February 23rd to join Yvette Brown and Gary Saulson. Ms. Brown will be in the Tomesko classroom building at 11:30 AM. in room 103, and Mr. Saulson will be there at 7PM.
