contract calls for 30 additional payments. If I discontinue further payments and the bank repossesses the dryer, can it take further legal steps against me?
C. V.

A. The bank's right of action against you would depend upon the terms of the written agreement which you signed when you purchased the dryer. It is probable that the bank would have the right to collect the full amount of the obligation against you even though the dryer is repossessed. To forestall the liability, you should pursue the cause of action which you may have against the seller for the fraudulent inducement of the contract. If you sit on your rights without taking any affirmative action, you may later be prejudiced and be unable to raise any defense to the bank's demand for full payment.

Q A home is owned by myself and two sisters. I would like to know if my sisters' shares can be willed to others or would the property automatically revert to the surviving heirs.
G. B.

A You and your sisters can hold the property as "tenants in common" or as "joint tenants". If you hold as "tenants in common", each of you owns an undivided one-third interest and you or your sisters can dispose of your interest by your will. If you own as "joint tenants", it would pass to the survivor upon the death of one of you. It all depends upon the wording in the deed. We suggest you show the deed to a lawyer who can tell at a glance exactly how you hold title. You may want to change things, depending upon your personal situation or desires.
