Q. How much does it cost to change my girl's name? I have remarried and my daughter still has my first husband's name. Please advise me C. R.

A. The best procedure would be to have your second husband adopt your daughter, which would make her his legal daughter, and automatically effect a change of name. Otherwise through you, as her guardian, she can petition the court to change her name. The costs of these procedures vary with the locality, and it is suggested you contact a local attorney, who could easily advise you as to the expenses incident to the two procedures.

Q Recently my husband and I separated, although we did not obtain a divorce inasmuch as the West Coast is my original home, is there any law to prevent me from returning there? At this time it seems probable that we will divorce but no action has been taken J S S.

A So long as you are not worried about being charged with desertion, which is a ground for divorce in most States, you are perfectly free to return to your home. Before you leave, however, you should be sure that all your joint property rights are adjusted so as to avoid later difficulty in the event one of you sues for divorce.

Q If a man marries a woman who has two illegitimate children and they later separate, can he be compelled to support those children? One of the children uses his name but neither has been legally adopted by him C M

A Because he has not legally adopted the children, the man is under no legal duty to support them. They are the responsibility of their real father, and the mother should have brought an appropriate action against him for their support.

Good Fit Prevents Made-At-Home Look

There's a grace and air of well-being that goes with a beautifully fitted costume.

The key is the correct selection of well-fitted and appropriate foundation garments, slips, petticoats, and shoes, says Bernice Tharp, extension clothing specialist of the Pennsylvania State University.

To eliminate the made at home look, prepare for the first fitting of the pattern and later garment fittings by wearing the correct undergarments.

Make Spatter Shield For Kitchen Range

Does the wall behind your range get spattered when you cook?

Bonnie Dale Sansom, extension home management specialist of the Pennsylvania State University, says there's an easy way to make a shield to protect the wall. Fasten a washable roller window shade to the wall behind your range so it hidden behind the appliance.

When cooking, pull the shade up and fasten it to a small hook placed several feet above the range. When not in use, keep it down and out of sight.
