Q. If a man is found injured on a highway, should you pick him up and take him to a doctor or hospital or should you let him lay and call an ambulance? By this I mean do you assume any legal responsibility by picking him up? J F H

A. If you handled the injured man negligently, and he could establish that your negligence aggravated his injuries, so as to cause him additional expense and suffering, you would be liable even through your intentions were of the best

It might also be noted that medical practitioners have stated more than once that well-meaning individuals who are inexperienced in first aid and the handling of injured persons often do more harm than good in attempting to move an accident victim before competent assistance arrives We understand that the best procedure is to staunch any abnormal flow of blood, loosen tight clothing, keep the victim warm, keep the crowds away, and keep him immobile until the ambulance arrives.

Q I am a widow and plan to marry in the near future I have a son and have my bonds in my son's name and my name as co-owners My group insurance and pension plan where I am employed name my son as beneficiary After I marry, I wish to have things remain as they are Can I name my son as beneficiary or must I add my husband's name? N M C

A Unless your group insurance contract provides otherwise, there is no requirement that you change beneficiary designations after the marriage Read your insurance policy carefully, particularly the provisions pertaining to beneficiaries, and change of beneficiaries If you are still not certain of your rights after reading the policy, it is suggested you discuss the matter further with your attorney

Q Is there a law against the erection of a party line fence without the mutual agreement of the owners? The original fence was 4 feet high, but our neighbors erected a new fence 6 feet high This cuts off sunshine and air H J Z

A This fence is something referred to as a "Spite fence" As long as it is within the property lines of the party who erected it, there is no method for obtaining a removal of the fence In Pennsylvania, at least, we do not follow the doctrine known in the law as "ancient lights," and there is thus no fundamental right of a property owner to sunshine and air If one's neighbor chooses to cut off these elements by the erection of a fence or wall, a property owner has two alternatives — move or endure it This answer assumes that no specific agreement or covenant is contained in the deed which gives the property owner any right to sunshine and air from adjoining properties

Pennsylvania State Grange Asks Law to Pay Damage by Mobs

HARRISBURG — The actual destruction of private property that occurred in Mercer County during the recent Westinghouse strike and the threats made to farmers that farm buildings would be burned or herds poisoned during the milk strike in Fayette County distinctly illustrates the need for legislation that will make certain that law enforcement agencies act to protect private property from mob action in such situations, it was pointed out late last week in Harrisburg by J. Collins McSparran, Master of the Pennsylvania State Grange.

Mr McSparran further stated, Pennsylvania State Grange officials will comply with the action of the delegate body attending the Annual State Grange Session held in Erie, Pa. and will prepare such legislation for presentation to the next session of the Pennsylvania Legislature which will convene in Harrisburg in January

Such legislation will benefit every property owner in the State of Pennsylvania and should have the support of every thinking citizen
