

College of Agriculture Exhibits at Farm Show

The College of Agriculture at the Pennsylvania State University will have an exhibit at the Farm Show, featuring research, resident instruction, and extension.

The instruction exhibit will show the need for more college graduates in agriculture. Art work will show that agricultural colleges graduate 8,500 students annually in the United States. Since job offers exceed 16,000, there are two jobs available for every graduate. Of 62 million people gainfully employed in the United States, 25 million work in some phase of agriculture.

The Extension Service will feature exhibits of 4-H Club opportunities, and the need for safety from fires and poisons. The exhibit will show that fires kill 6,300 people each year with property loss amounting to 885 million dollars. Fire extinguishers will be labeled for the type of fire they put out. Common items around the home that are poisonous will be shown.

EXPLAINING the research program of Indian River Poultry Farms, James E. Dorsey said that the needs of the grower, hatcheryman and the processor must be considered when developing broilers. (Staff Photo)

Panel of Feedmen, Processors Discuss Poultry Industry Problems

An eight member panel discussed some of the problems and ills of the poultry industry Jan. 3 at a dinner given by the Indian River Poultry Farm, Inc., at the Stevens House in Lancaster.

Herman Bloom of the Bird In Hand Poultry Co. said that despite the apparent glut in the market, there are not enough broilers to supply local processors. He estimates that seven million broilers are required to supply the local market.

Bloom also said that producers who are in the business to stay, that will produce a steady supply of birds over the year, will make a profit.

He also believes that the government should stay out of the poultry business and let the market find its own level.

The promotion problem of the industry was also discussed. "Skip" Weaver of Purina Mills said that most of the promotion now being done is from outside the industry. He said that more promotion for poultry products is badly needed.

Weaver also said "The poultry business is a sound basic industry."

"But," he added, "in order to stay in business in this highly competitive business, the local feed dealer is going to have to provide service and he is going to have to sell."

"The dealer should not compromise too much with his customers. He must earn the right to sell."

James E. Dorsey of Indian River showed slides of the Indian River research program after the discussion.

This type of dinner-discussion is one of 11 held throughout the country.

Approximately 150 poultrymen, feed dealers and poultry processors attended the Lancaster meeting.

George Ellis, president of Indian River Farms, was toastmaster.

The panel consisted of Clarence Ritter, R & L Farms; Clarence Manbeck, C. F. Manbeck, Inc.; Weaver; Ellis; Earl Groff, Eastern States Farmers' Exchange; Bloom; and Ralph Holder, Miller & Bushong.

Thyroprotein of Little Value in Most Dairy Herds

WASHINGTON — (USDA) — Recent tests by U. S. Department of Agriculture and Montana scientists indicate that use of thyroprotein in mixed feeds to stimulate milk production in dairy cows has little practical value for most herds. Thyroprotein has been available in commercial feeds for a number of years.
