

Pa. Tomato, Sweet Corn Available For Spring Planting

hybrid varieties of sweet corn, developed by the Agricultural Station at the Pennsylvania State University, now available for this spring.

New hybrids are the Penn 103 tomato and Penn sweet corn, both introduced by B. L. Pollack, vegetable breeder for the station.

Penn 103 is an early F1 tomato for home garden or for commercial market. It grows equally well on the ground, on trellises or when staked. Penn 103 has a vigorous growing vine with large, solid, well-colored fruits.

Penna 103 will grow large yields of high-quality, crack free fruits throughout the growing season with very little variation in size.

Pennlewis is a new high-quality hybrid sweet corn developed for the home garden. It can be eaten fresh or processed. Pennlewis is also intended for those roadside markets whose customers recognize and appreciate high-quality sweet corn. This hybrid matures in the late Carmelcross season about four days before Golden Cross Bantam.

The stalks of Pennlewis are vigorous and predominately two-eared, each ear averaging eight inches long with 12 to 14 kernel rows. The kernels are narrow and deep with good color, tender pericarp, and excellent flavor and quality.

can be obtained by writing to Dr. B. L. Pollock, 106 Tyson Building, The Pennsylvania State University, University Park, Pennsylvania.
