State-Vet School Adds Top Mastitis Specialist

Dr. James M. Murphy, of the New York State College of Veterinary Medicine at Cornell University, who is recognized as one of the world's outstanding clinical authorities on bovine mastitis, has been appointed Research Professor of Veterinary Medicine at the University of Pennsylvania School of Veterinary Medicine, it has been announced by Dr. Mark W. Allam, dean of the school.

He will assume his new post at the School's 320 acre field station at New Bolton Center, Chester County, July 1st.

Dr. Murphy is a native of Philadelphia and received his V.M.D. degree from the University of Pennsylvania School of Veterinary Medicine in 1935.

His career in mastitis began at the school when he served briefly on the faculty from 1935 to 1937. He was an associate professor of dairy husbandry at Rutgers University until 1940. He devoted full time to mastitis research.

He is certainly one of the best men in the field and with our organization and facilities for laboratory investigation to the nature and make some major contribution to a solution of this disease, we are serious health problem of farmers.
