

Milk Program In Schools Makes Nickel Important Coin Again

The lowly nickel is making a comeback. Long inadequate for most purchases, the lowly five cent piece is once again valued. Last year, over 88 million nickels were spent by Pennsylvania school children who took advantage of state milk dealer price reductions and federal subsidies totaling over five and a half million dollars to buy half pints of milk for only five cents.

Lancaster County milk dealers reduced their price to schools by $98,939.95, as county school children consumed 14,070 half pints of milk. The price reduction for the entire state amounted to two and three quarter million dollars — over a dollar for each grade school student. Children consumed 88 million half pints of milk during the last school year.

"The lower price does not reflect any decrease in costs for the dairy industry", said Milk Commissioner John A. Smith "It does reflect both government and dairy industry interest in providing school children with an adequate diet. Milk dealers sacrifice normal profit and provide free service to get this extra milk into the diets of our boys and girls"

Pennsylvania ranks sixth in the nation in quantity of milk consumed by children under the school milk program, revealed Clyde A. Zehner, School Lunch Supervisor, Department of Public Instruction. He said that only New York, California, Michigan, Illinois and Ohio school children consumed more milk last year, and therefore rated larger subsidy payments from the federal government.

With an 81 million dollar national school milk appropriation, (up six million dollars from the previous year's budget), federal government concern for school children's diets makes itself widely felt. The federal government furnished the Commonwealth with about three million dollars to dispense to schools participating in the program.

Schools receive up to four cents for every extra half pint consumed. The amount depends on whether or not the school also participates in the national school lunch
