COCOANUT TREAT

3 tablespoons butter
 1/2 cup packed brown sugar
 1/4 cup water
 1/2 cup shredded or flaked coconut
 1/4 cup slivered almonds

Combine butter, sugar, and water in heavy skillet. Stirring constantly, cook until mixture becomes bubbly. Continue to cook for approximately 3 minutes or until all sugar crystals are dissolved. Remove from heat. Add coconut and almonds. Serve either hot or cold over vanilla ice cream. Makes enough for 4 to 6 servings.

TRAVELING WITH BABY

Traveling with a small baby need not be tiresome when mother relies on modern helpers she can get in her local store. With a few of today's product improvements, a jaunt by car, plane, bus or tram can be made much easier.

Here are tips for easing mother's job of caring for baby while traveling. (Most of these suggestions are good for stay-at-homes, too!)

Start when baby is well rested. An early morning beginning can mean a peaceful journey and a more composed arrival.

Summer travel — especially by car — can be warm. Dress baby comfortably, in lightweight clothing. Tuck a change of costume in the tote bag for an easy, refreshing change about midway to the destination.

Baby food in glass jars can be heated for baby's lunch or mid-afternoon snack on almost any of today's modern transportation facilities. Your plane hostess or railroad porter will be glad to see that a bottle of formula or jar of food is just the right temperature. Some buses also feature a hostess, as do some modern coach trains.

If you plan a stop at hotel or motel, remember that an electric bottle warmer is handy, since it can also be used to heat baby's food in jars.

Here's another tip. Use empty baby food jars, with the new screw-on caps, for carrying baby's instant cereal. Put two tablespoons of cereal in a clean jar for each serving, and seal with the cap. Then at mealtime, add formula or warm milk; and cereal is ready to serve.

While baby foods in glass jars are carried safely without refrigeration before being opened, safety-first dictates keeping them cold after they are opened. A small portable refrigerator will do the trick. If you have no efficient means of refrigeration it is best to dispose of leftover baby foods while traveling.

Empty baby food jars are ideal for carrying nipples, cotton-tipped swabs, and extra safety pins. Tight sealing screw-on lids will keep the contents clean. A twist of the cap, and the jar is open for quick removal of the needed pin, swab, or nipple.

Aluminum foil is another help to families at home or "on the road." A snug wrapping of foil around a sterilized formula bottle will help retain heat.
