F.H.A. Loan Availability Is Broadened

Farmers who have regular off-farm employment, if otherwise eligible, may obtain farm operating and development loans from the Farmers Home Administration under recently revised regulations of the agency, the U. S. Department of Agriculture has announced.

Previously, except in rural development counties, a farmer had to spend most of his time farming in order to qualify for a loan.

Experience gained in rural development counties has shown that many farmers regularly employed off the farm can profitably use the agency's credit facilities to increase the farm portions of their total incomes, the USDA said. The regulation which limited its assistance to farmers who spend most of their time farming prevented some from obtaining the maximum income from their farms, and from taking advantage of opportunities for industrial and other off-farm employment.

Other eligibility requirements remain unchanged. Applicants must have sufficient farm experience to carry on sound farm operations, must

Swine Growers Urged To Have Sows Tested

Harrisburg—Penna Swine breeders are being urged by the Bureau of Animal Industry of the State Department to have their breeding stock tested for brucellosis.

Testing of swine for brucellosis is to be done on a voluntary basis by local veterinarians. However when all breeding stock is tested and found free of brucellosis infection a certificate will be issued the herd owner by the Bureau of Animal Industry.

Testing of swine for brucellosis is more difficult than cattle testing. Veins are difficult to locate and the blood collected for the test doesn't hold up well in transportation. All of Pennsylvania's practicing veterinarians have received special instructions in the collection handling and transportation of swine blood samples to be tested in the BAI laboratory in Sumnerdale.

Dr. Robert L. Elsen, acting director of the Bureau of Animal Industry, points out that a large proportion of the cases of undulant fever disclosed in humans last year was traced to infections received when slaughtering swine.

Pennsylvania received a modified certification as brucellosis-free from the federal government in 1958 when no more than five per cent of the cattle herds and fewer than one per cent of the dairy and beef animals in the state were found to be infected with brucellosis. Pennsylvania was the eleventh state to be certified as brucellosis-free with modifications.

Certification as brucellosis-free gives a swine or cattle herd owner greater freedom to ship breeding stock from state to state.

need credit, and be unable to obtain needed financial assistance from other sources. Credit will be extended only to operators of farms that are family size or smaller. Loan funds may be used to pay farm operating costs, purchase equipment and livestock, pay farm development costs and refinance certain debts.
