Meat Prices Are Higher

Area foodshoppers are likely to find meat values a little on the high side this weekend, according to Tom Piper, Penn State Extension Marketing Agent. Beef, lamb and veal promise to carry higher price tags as supplies coming to market in recent weeks have been insufficient to meet the demand. Turkey prices have advanced since Thanksgiving.

Meat values this weekend will likely include chicken and fresh pork items, especially pork loins and fresh picnics.

With the deer hunting season open in Pennsylvania, many families will be serving venison as the meat dish. Venison that has been properly pressed, correctly cooked, and attractively served is delicious food that most folks will relish. Cooking tests made in the College of Home Economics at The Pennsylvania State University have indicated that correctly cooked venison which has been properly cared for after killing probably could not be distinguished from beef of a similar grade.

Larger shipments of Florida vegetables are coming to the market each week now. Open weather has kept Long Island cauliflower available at bargain prices, and cabbage is also in plentiful supply. Celery, potatoes, onions, and Brussel sprouts continue as good buys. Arizona reports they have the best lettuce quality since the 40's.

Oranges, apples, grapefruit and grapes continue to offer the best fruit values to foodshoppers. Small size oranges offer the best value for the money.

Most of us are interested in stretching the budget at this season of the year. You can do just that if you will keep aware of what your market is featuring—study and compare food ads. Take advantage of sales when possible. Include weekly food specials in your buying.
