 hard for the election of Mr. Kennedy that he lost his own race by the scant margin of 23 000 votes.
 World War II Veteran
 Like President elect Kennedy, Mr. Freeman served his country in the Pacific during World War II. He joined the Marines shortly after graduation from college, advanced to the rank of Major, stopped a Japanese bullet with his jaw, spent months in a hospital and was decorated.

The shattered jaw and the resulting impediment in his speech could have discouraged a less determined politician. He, however, overcame that difficulty sufficiently to make the nominating speech for Mr. Kennedy at the Democratic convention last July.

He wanted to become Attorney General in the Kennedy Cabinet but when that job was denied him he accepted the Agriculture post with some misgivings. Friends warned him the job is “political dead end street”. Mr. Freeman likes to make speeches, in which he quotes the late Dr. Albert Einstein. He talks manily about social welfare, civil rights, mental health, medical care for the aged, and education for retarded children.
