CALCIUM LOW
One-fourth of the 141 soil samples tested for magnesium levels at Penn State were deficient in 1960. Soil samples for magnesium testing came from 25 counties. Soil sent in from 20 counties for calcium testing showed very low calcium levels in 12 per cent of the samples.

Best Food Buys Produce Quality Improves

A flexible shopping list and careful buying will help keep the food budget balanced this week-end, declares Tom Piper, Penn State Extension Marketing Agent. Weather conditions and changing seasonal production patterns will influence the food values offered in area food markets.

Freezing temperatures in the muckland vegetable growing areas of Florida give promise of higher retail prices for green beans, sweet corn, and tender leafy salad items. Tomato prices are much higher as harvest of the winter crop nears an end. Smaller supplies of broccoli, Brussel sprouts, cucumbers, peppers, and egg plant cause these items to be higher priced with the early shipments of asparagus.

Iceberg lettuce remains an outstanding buy at the produce counter. The heads are firm, green and heavy for size, and quality is generally excellent. Other fair to good buys include celery, yellow onions, cabbage, carrots, green onions, cauliflower & radishes. Potatoes continue plentiful and shoppers may choose from fall-crop potatoes from Pennsylvania or Maine and new potatoes from Florida. Grapefruit is the leading value at the fruit counter. This popular citrus item is in peak supply and prices are approaching the low point for the season. Fast transportation from growing areas means the consumer can enjoy tree-ripened quality. Orange prices are much higher California Naval oranges and the Pineapple and Temple varieties are almost over for this year. Valencia oranges are coming on the market now but prices promise to remain firm.

Strawberries are more plentifully supplied and prices will depend upon the size and quality of the fruit. Stayman, Delicious, Rome & Winesap apples are available at unchanged prices. Bananas and Emperor grapes continue on the list of reasonably priced fruit. Imported melons, peaches, and pineapples are available for those willing to pay the price.

Retail egg prices have been easing downward in recent weeks as supplies have been increasing. You will find the large size Grade A eggs the best value now if you make your comparison on a weight basis.
