

● Tobacco

he said this week. "Prospects don't look at all good for next year," he explained. "And labor is getting harder to get and higher priced all the time."

We will grow more corn and tomatoes in place of the tobacco, he said

Barley has 15 acres of tomatoes in the field now. He has had as many as 20 acres of tomatoes in former years, but plants were scarce this year and the season was late. Even though Barley feels he did not get his plants into the field as early as he would have liked, blossoms are beginning to set on some of the larger stalks.

"Farming is all a gamble," Barley says. You have to take a chance on what you think you should do. I could have sold my tobacco for a good price early, but I do not think I was offered a fair price. I just unloaded a pen of steers I was holding for better price, he said. but the price just kept slipping. That was the first pen I ever lost money on.

"I'm no different from anybody else," Barley said, "But I just made up my mind I wasn't going to sell unless I got my price"

In talking with Barley, one gets the feeling he does not want to be a hero, nor does he want to be looked at as a rugged individualist. He is a farmer who wants his fair share, but no more, of the consumer's dollar and he is willing to stand by his word to try to get it. He is not making a grandstand play, and he would be one of the last to ask for publicity for his action, but he does believe farmers should have a greater control over the marketing of his products.

BUYING FROZEN FISH

Good quality frozen fish has little or no odor, points out Mrs. LaRue Hefner, Penn State extension foods specialist. Fish should be solidly frozen and there should be no discoloration or brownish tinge in the flesh. Buy fillets and steaks that are wrapped in a moisture-vapor-proof material. At home, keep frozen until ready for use. Do not re-freeze once it has been thawed.
